South gets new track

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Safer stairway railings at Newton North High School, a new running track for Newton South, a new computer for the police department, renovations at the Newtonville Senior Citizen Drop-in Center and new ceilings for several schools all received approval from the Board of Aldermen Monday night.

Only two of the fiscal 1985 supplemental capital outlay budget projects, which have a total cost of $259,000, passed without any dissension from aldermen.

Requests for an $80,000 computer system expected to provide the police department with highly advanced organization capabilities and $84,000 to replace falling tiles in the ceiling at the South High auditorium and those at the Bowen, Countryside and Zervas elementary schools were approved without debate by a 20-0 vote with four aldermen absent.

The city is expected to receive professional bids on the computer request soon and the ceiling tile replacement will likely occur during students' Christmas vacation.

The board voted 18-3 with three absent to approve an $84,000 proposal to raise the height of eight stairway railings near the North High gymnasium six inches, a safety improvement requested by the city's last three health commissioners.

Alderman Louis Irwin, Edward Richmond and Sondra Shick voted against the railing renovations because no injuries have occurred in the 12 years the stair-

In their "offices," there are no desks or chairs. There aren't even walls. Where they work, clad in navy blue uniforms, literally hundreds of people, mostly children, pass through daily. Wearing white gloves, two, sometimes three times a day, they stand in the middle of the street, stopping traffic, so the city's children can walk home a little more safely.

Margaret "Peggy" Hart and Valerie Boynton are traffic supervisors — the last two remaining of the original 20, since the program's inception 35 years ago.

Poised on their respective corners — "Peggy" at the corner of Adams Street and Wiltshire Road and "Mrs. Boynton" at Vernon and Eldridge — badge numbers 301 and 302 speak like one mind with two mouths.

Other than their ages — they're "over 50 and under 90" — and the fact that their career paths have been similar, the shorter, ruddy-complexioned Peggy and the taller, Georgia native Val, don't seem to have much in common.

But, as Val says with a chuckle, "We old girls have to stick together."

These "old girls" have stuck together since they "took to the streets" to earn a little extra money for

Village study is stymied

By Edward Cafasso, Staff Writer

NEWTON — The village study, touted by Mayor Theodore D. Mann as "the Bible" expected to guide commercial development here into the 21st century, has been dealt another two-week delay by Ward 4 Alderman-at-Large Richard J. McGrath.

McGrath last night moved to "reconsider" the ambitious planning proposal after the Board of Aldermen voted 18-4 with two members absent to approve the long-awaited study. Two weeks ago, McGrath raised Mann's ire when he "chartered" the project because he could not get his colleagues to agree to a spending cap.

McGrath, who was among the aldermen who voted to approve the study last night, said he moved reconsideration because he wanted the project to pass through the board simultaneously with his companion resolution asking the mayor for a $100,000 spending ceiling on the proposal.

Ward 8 Alderman-at-Large Cynthia Creem chartered that resolution last night after it became clear McGrath would again move to delay the study's almost assured passage.

Aldermen Richard J. Bullwinkle, Bruce B. Carmichael, Ronald A. Marini and Dominic J. Taglienti voted against the item's passage.

Planning Director Barry Canner had requested $80,000 to get the study of development capacities in each of the city's 13 villages off the ground and told alderman the completed document would probably cost twice that much, if not more.

The latest bit of parlimentary manuevering came after an hour of debate that saw 13 aldermen rise to give their opinions on whether the estimated cost is reasonable and on what they thought the proposed study would accomplish.

Florentines falling for fast food, new friends

NEWTONVILLE — Out in back of Jack and Mary Bourgeois' large yellow house on Brookdale Road, the sounds of splashing pool water and American rock music mix with the chatter of young voices.

The slight chill of the early fall air is charged with the energy and laughter of any typical teenage pool party.

But, although it is not immediately recognizable, the party here is not your average afterschool bash. In fact, half of the guests here have come from thousands of miles away.

Seventeen of the teens swarming noisily in and out of the porch's constantly slamming screen door are Italian exchange students, who left their native Florence almost a month ago in order to immerse themselves into American language, life and culture.

During their past three weeks the students have taken a whirlwind tour through Newport, R.I., climbed the World Trade Center and rode around New York City's Statue of Liberty last weekend, and have seen such Greater Boston sites as the Fine Arts and science museums, the Old North

Bathroom dispute stalls housing

By Edward Cafasso, Staff Writer

NEWTON — A dispute over bathroom renovations in a Newton Centre home destined for the city's subsidized housing rolls has put several members of the aldermanic Finance Committee on a collision course with a Brookline-based developer.

The two-family house at 399 Langley Road is being offered to the Newton Community Development Authority (NCDA) for $110,000 by Mel Barkan, developer of the Fairway Condominiums at the Chestnut Hill Golf Course, as partial fulfillment of the city's "10 percent" housing ordinance.

The ordinance requires developers who receive a special permit allowing increased density to provide the city with elderly or family housing units.

FinCom Chairman Paul E. Coletti vowed this week to reject aldermanic acceptance of the Langley Road home until Barkan constructs an addition onto the site that would expand its currently cramped bathrooms, renovations that NCDA member and City Housing Coordinator John Quatrale said Barkan refuses to do.

> 'If the bathrooms aren't done, I'll move that the committee reject acceptance of this property. I'd love to get at this guy....'
> FinCom Chairman Paul Coletti

"If the bathrooms aren't done, I'll move that the committee reject acceptance of this property. I'd love to get at this guy. ..I promise that I'll be damned if he'll get occupancy permits for his luxury units if he doesn't expand that bathroom or find other properties the city can use," Coletti told Quatrale and FinCom members.

Coletti also said he would get placards and picket Barkan's other holdings if he doesn't agree to the work at 399 Langley Road.

Coletti's stand on the Langley Road home has also run smack into contrary opinions expressed by the other city departments involved in readying the site for occupancy.

According to Quatrale, the home already has occupancy permits from the health and building departments, and Barkan's

Guards getting guns at BC

By Edward Cafasso, Staff Writer

CHESTNUT HILL — Michael A. Malec, chairman of the Boston College Sociology Department and the city's Ward 5 alderman, opened the school's student newspaper a few days ago to discover BC administrators had given the campus police force the right to carry guns.

It was the first time that he, many other faculty members and thousands of students at the school had heard of the new policy for BC's Chestnut Hill and Newton law school campuses.

"I was surprised. I wasn't aware of a problem of such magnitude to indicate such a policy change," he said, adding that he would request members of BC's Faculty Senate to seek more information on the ruling.

After debating the move for several years and consulting the municipal police chiefs in neighboring communities this summer, BC decided to issue revolvers to almost half the school's 41-member police force when the fall semester began earlier this month and sent the remaining officers to train for the task at the State Police academy.

Some BC upperclassmen active in student affairs and alumni were surprised by the new policy because they say it flys in the face of arguments made by school officials and BC Police Chief Kenneth Watson almost three years ago during a court battle over whether the campus police logs, which provide a daily record of all criminal and police activity within BC's jurisdiction, should be open for public inspection.

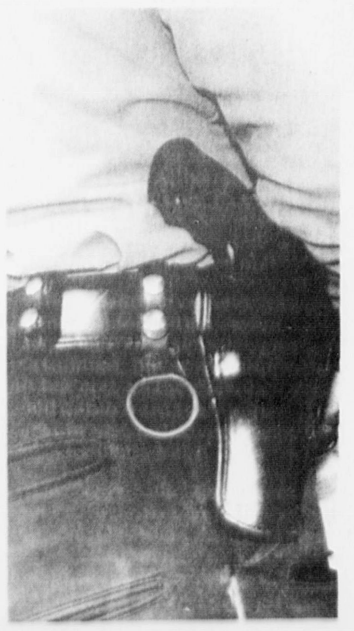

After reports of several rapes on campus, editors at "The Heights," BC's independent, student-run newspaper, sued for the records under a state statute and were met with arguments that the campus police force was not an officially recognized, independent, law enforcement agency, a line of reasoning overturned by a court in December 1981.

School administrators and Watson have said the move toward firearms represents an outgrowth of their efforts to modernize campus police protection in the face of a student population that has more than tripled in the last 15 years.

Dr. Larry Barton, BC's newly-named community relations director, said yesterday he believes arming BC police with handguns should give residential neighbors of the school an added sense of security.

"We think the neighborhood has always benefited from having our officers patrolling there on a regular basis. This will further enhance that protection and provide a more effective deterrent to crime than ever before."

their families. At that time their children were in school, and the traffic supervisor's hours worked easily into their daily routine.

Now Peggy has raised six children and Val two, but they still work an hour every morning and a few every afternoon. Each has worked her stint in her own village — Val at the Underwood School in "Newton Proper" and Peggy just down the street from her native Nonantum at Our Lady's.

Every day is full of amusing little episodes. "Kids say funny things," Peggy says, obviously ready to share an anecdote.

She recalls that one morning there was "a little professor — with the big glasses. I leaned over and said 'Good morning, my little man' and he looked up and said 'Good morning, my old lady.'" And she and Val roared.

Peggy Hart

Val remembers an older couple stopping their car and asking her how far she was going. "They thought I was a Navy girl on leave."

It is these times and others equally memorable that have kept these former public safety "Calendar Girls" working, rain or shine. (They both appeared on the city's official calendar last year.) The two now cross many children whose parents they crossed over 30 years ago, and Val even crosses one of her grandchildren.

Occasionally they'll say to each other, "When is it? This year? Next year?" referring to the time when they'll retire and "head for the Bahamas."

"We want a double party," Val joked.

Peggy, who feels she's "had a pretty full life," is thinking of retiring this winter, but she can't be sure.

What if she does, Val? "I guess I'll have to retire too."

Furor over fireworks is still fizzling

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Hopes for a July fireworks display to celebrate a Nonantum religious organization's 50th anniversary now rest with a subcommittee of aldermen, who will have to work with fire officials to find a new location for the controversial pyrotechnic display.

A suggestion to form the group was unanimously approved last week by the aldermanic Public Safety & Transportation Committee after two hours of often emotional testimony on the fireworks issue. The Board of Aldermen approved the group's formation with no dissent Monday night, but its membership remained unclear.

The two-hour hearing, which about 50 residents attended, saw Fire Chief Edward B. Reilly Jr., who this summer refused to grant a permit request from the St. Mary of Carmen Society for a seven-minute fireworks display, and Fire Capt. Carmine Tedesco weather a barrage of questions about the ban from aldermen and Nonantum neighborhood leaders.

While both sides in the dispute began the session by expressing their hope that a concilliation on the fireworks issue could be reached, the hearing ended on less substantive terms and several residents expressed anger with the embattled Reilly's uncompromising stance.

St. Mary of Carmen Society President Anthony Gentile, the licensed fireworks operator who was supposed to coordinate this year's ill-fated display, told aldermen, "At this point, I personally don't care if we ever have fireworks again," and later admitted he was "disgusted" with the inability to reach a compromise for a show to mark next year's festival.

The hearing did reveal numerous previously unknown facts involving Reilly's permit denial.

•Fireworks permits for a display in Our Lady Help of Christians parking lot were granted to the society in 1982 and 1983 based on pervious measurements of the parking lot taken by fire officials, but it was discovered this year that the site did not meet the minimum 200 feet clearance requirements under state fire codes, Reilly said.

"We made a mistake in measuring," he told aldermen.

•Reilly also admitted that he did not put the reasons for his permit denial or alleged permit violations in 1982 and 1983 in writing, despite the fact that such responses are required by state code.

•The fire chief made it clear that he would not grant a 1985 permit request for a display at Our Lady's and said he does not know of any place in the city where a fireworks show can take place safely.

"Newton has very few spaces that are probably acceptable for an aerial display. The places that are acceptable to us are probably unacceptable to the neighbors...I really don't know if I can grant a permit for any place in the city. I don't know of any place you can shoot off an aerial display," he said.

•A September 21 letter from State Fire Marshall Joseph A. O'Keefe to Reilly said some of the fireworks used by Gentile "were aerial shells as defined by international, national, state and industry standards, in violation of the terms of the permit."

O'Keefe's letter also reiterated Reilly's position that there is not enough space at Our Lady's for a safe display.

"...You are hereby directed to issue no further permits for the display of aerial fireworks for that particular location (Our Lady's), and further, Mr. Gentile will be asked to appear before me to show cause why his certificate of competency to conduct fireworks displays should not be revoked or suspended," O'Keefe's letter concluded.

•An August 3 letter from Telstar Display Fireworks, Inc., the New Hampshire-based pyrotechnic manufacturer that employs Gentile as a district manager, to aldermen said the materials used by Gentile in 1982 and 1983 are classified as the ground display variety, despite statements to the contrary by Reilly and Tedesco.

Calling Gentile "one of the most trusted and respected pyrotechnists in the state" and his record "flawless," the letter from Telstar President Lionel Bergeron concluded, "We strongly feel that some of the statements made about Mr. Gentile can hurt his reputation and reflect upon our company's reputation. We strongly feel that everything Mr. Gentile did was done legally..."

"It's not the fire chief's place to pick a site. You come to us with a site and we'll measure it

North officially asbestos-free

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Students at the Newton North High School now have official documentation that their building is free of airborne asbestos and safe to attend.

A report recently released by Hygeia, Inc. of Waltham, the city's asbestos consultant, says air samples taken during and after the removal process indicate none of the carcinogenic material remains in the fourth floor ceilings.

"Based on our monitoring during the removal process itself and our collection of air samples at the conclusion of the asbestos removal, we conclude that the areas of construction in this school are now free of asbestos," states the report, signed by the company's senior consultant, Dr. Charles M. Spooner.

The Hygeia company used air sampling pumps with special filters at the work sites and in other locations inside and outside of the school.

The tests were conducted from June 27 through August 17, during a removal initiated by G.S. Maloney Inc. of Brookline and completed by National Surface Cleaning of Methuen, the contractor which replaced Maloney in July.

According to the document, the "permissible exposure limit" to airborne asbestos in the workplace is 2.0 fibers per cubic centimeter of air. In order for the area to be considered "clean" after removal, the air can contain no more than 0.01 fibers per cubic centimeter of air.

Day Jr. kids trek to N.H.

NEWTON — Three hundred Day Junior High School students will be out of school the week of Oct. 1 through 5, with the blessing and guidance of over 35 Day teachers and administators who will lead them to Franconia Notch, N.H., for the annual seventh grade mountain hike.

Approximately 150 students make Trip #1 from Oct. 1 to 3 with Assistant Principal Jim Marini and about 15 teachers, all of whom have participated in a training session weekend at the mountain site.

Group #2, with Principal Ed Fraktman and another 15 trained teachers, will hike and study the latter half of the week, Oct. 3 to 5. Program co-coordinators for the entire exodus to the mountains are English teacher Bill Ames and math teacher Ann Collins, both well-versed in the ways of the woods and mountains.

The students, who undergo physical training such as exercises and jogging in their gym classes to prepare themselves for the hike, carry all food and equipment; they make their own meals, serve and clean up the sites, and spend their three days in the White Mountains studying the environment and its flora at various level.

Fiscal future looks gloomy for schools

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

NEWTON — If the impending financial crisis in the schools is to be properly confronted, the public must be aware of its existence.

This is one of the messages relayed by the Community Advisory Committee on Long-Range Financial Planning — an ad hoc committee which recently completed a gloomy financial forecast for the schools.

The advisory group proposed several alternatives in their report which they say could best succeed if school staff and non-school community members alike are aware of the crisis.

"I think the public has to know the down side, that we face significant financial problems," said committee member Buzz Birnham. "And there's a much bigger audience than just the parents out there."

Birnham said that a "multi-pronged" approach utilizing the efforts of the Mayor, school officials and committee members will be taken in order to spread the word. Although no specific action has yet been taken, School Committee and committee members agree that such community organizations as the Lion's club, Chamber of Commerce and the PTA should be informed.

The "down side" of the economic picture Birnham mentioned includes the fact that 77 percent of the Garden City's revenues come from property taxes, which, under the constraints of Proposition 2½, will not be able to keep up with the rates of inflation and increasing school revenue needs.

Since there is no likelihood that the remaining 22 percent of total revenue (which derives from state and local aid, sewer, water and other city taxes) will go up significantly, cutbacks will have to be made.

So-called "in-house" measures recommended by the committee and Superintendent of Schools John M. Strand include paring down administrative staff and personnel; lobbying to get more state aid for special education; and possible further consolidation of the schools, among other considerations.

Community-wide proposals include attempting to secure a more economic health care package for the city and schools; and the establishment of a Newton Educational Foundation, through which private businesses and individuals could donate funds to support education.

Although members have varying opinions as to whether a combination of in-house cutbacks and community-wide foundation support would actually mitigate the projected crisis, those interviewed last week agreed the point is to do everything possible to try.

"I think the crisis can be mitigated, but we've all got to get together," said Birnham. "What we can do is have an efficient school system that spends its money wisely. If we are more efficent, then we can look to the community and tell them we're working on it."

Although Strand is supportive of the measures proposed by the committee and has actually proposed a number of "in-house" cutbacks himself, he doesn't feel they represent a solution to the crisis.

"I don't think there will be enough state aid or economies," Strand said. "At some point, within the next two or three years, we're going to have to look at a partial override of Proposition 2½."

"The climate is not right for looking at 2½ now," added committee member Marie Hermann. "But if you've pursued all that you can, and you still have a problem, then you have to look at it."

The advisory committee has stated that retaining quality teachers and continuing the schools' longstanding tradition of excellence are top priorities when considering the budget.

"When and if the relative reduction in spending has reached a point of actually lowering educational quality," the report says, "then and only then will the time be ripe to consider a partial override of the tax levy limitation."

One purpose the committee hopes a public campaign will achieve — even if it doesn't necessarily find immediate solutions to the financial crisis — is to make the community aware.

"It will at least get people out there working on the problem," said Birnham.

Top that!

North students to mix real world with school

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

NEWTONVILLE — Newton North High School students completing graduation requirements ahead of time this year may also get a head start on their careers.

Thanks to S.P.A.R.C., the Senior Program Alternatives to Regular Classes, high school students completing graduation requirements by the first semester's end may spend their last semester of high school interning in anything that intrigues them.

On-Campus Coordinator Jeanne C. White and Newton North counselors Roberta Black, Maureen Prokopy and Myra Trachtenberg finalized S.P.A.R.C. plans last summer in time for this year's seniors to take advantage of the program.

"We noted there were internships in other school systems," White said. "And some of the counselors felt that there were students who were ready to combine the real world with the school world."

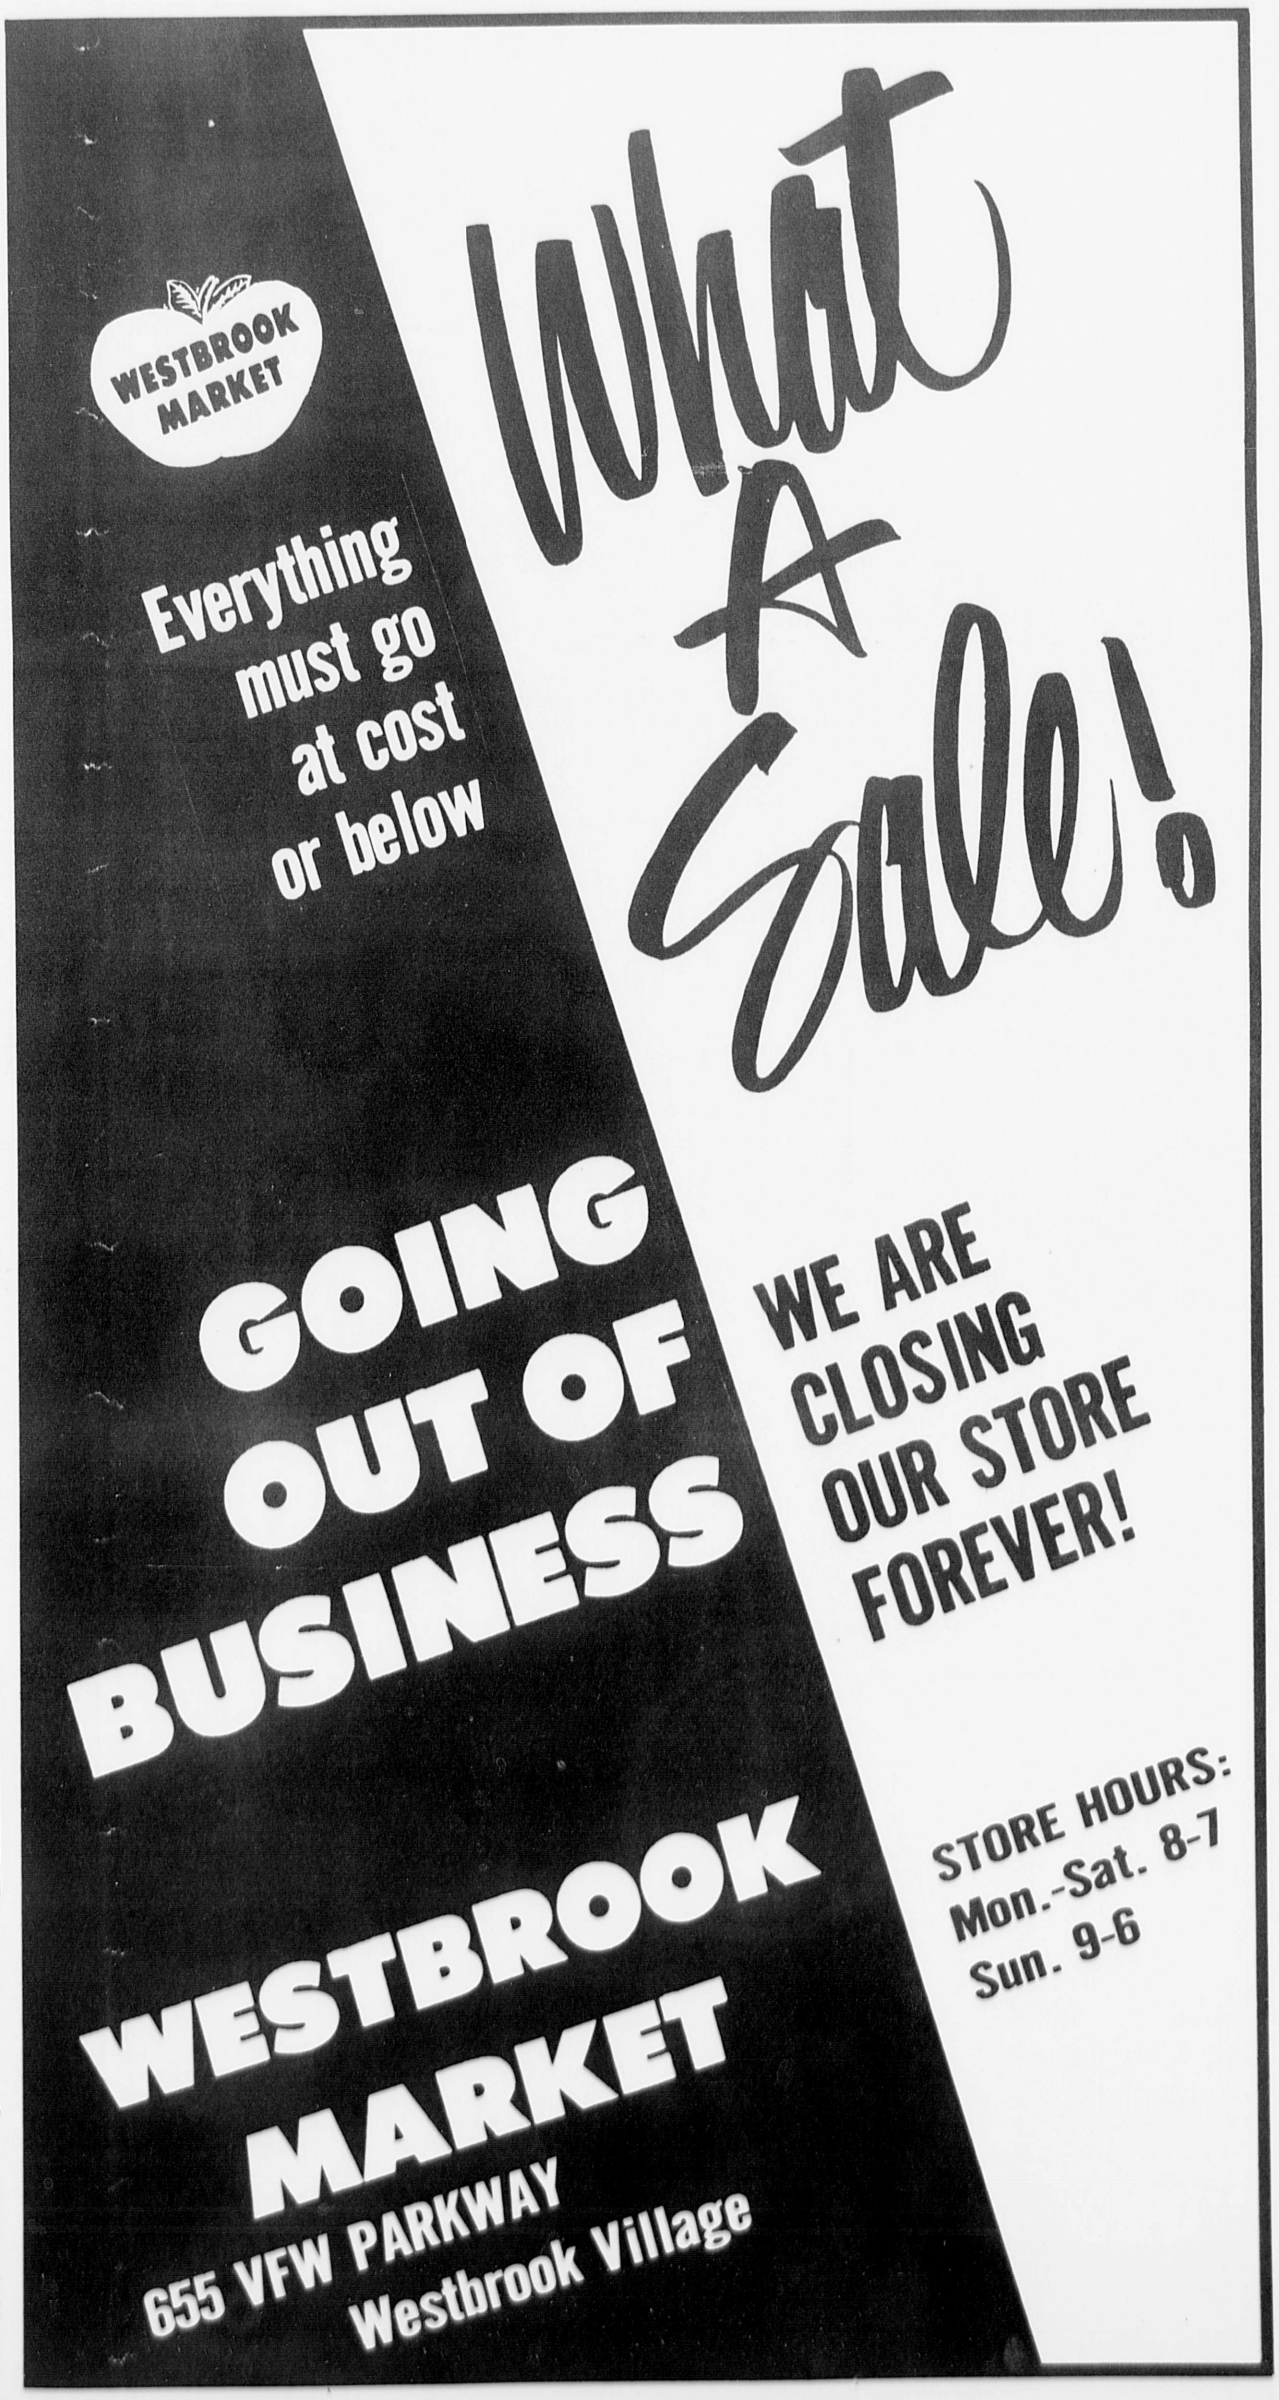

The planned internships will give students the opportunity to "put things they've learned in school to practical use," White added. Another important aspect of the program, she said, is that it embraces all career options, whether vocational or academic.

A student interested in electronics or carpentry can utilize an internship to decide on the right job to pursue right after high school, while a college-bound senior may use the experience in a law firm to better define feasible careers or colleges.

In order to get a feeling of "what it's really like out there," students will be required to contact places of interest and must interview for each internship they seek. "We don't want to conceive life in a perfect setting for them," said White, who added that one of the benefits of the program is that it prepares students for a world not seen within high school corridors.

White noted that the 15 hours of service required weekly by participating students will earn extra high school credit, but no pay.

By operating on a strict volunteer basis, she said, S.P.A.R.C. will hopefully attract students who are really interested and sponsors who will expect more from their interns than "licking stamps and stacking envelopes."

When a ban is just a bandaid

The Licensing Commission's concern for eliminating drunken driving in the Garden City is admirable, but the means it is using to achieve its ends are of questionable worth.

In following along with a statewide movement to ban "happy hours" and other such gimmicks designed to encourage alcohol abuse, the commission has opened itself up to the contention that it is merely treating the symptoms of the disease that continues to take lives, instead of the disease itself.

Commission members can now sit back and assure each other that they have done every thing within their power to eliminate this evil that seems to have sprung up full blown in our midst. While the commission points out that licensees, all of whom depend on the good graces of the commission for their livelihood, have willingly acquiesced to the recent multi-pronged ban, an informal poll of pub buffs insists that the restrictions are merely cosmetic.

If they want to get drunk and drive, there is little the commission can do about it, they contend.

When the serving of beer in pitchers is also banned because it "encourages" overindulgence, one has to wonder how this practice ever became so popular...all over the world, for hundreds of years.

When the local softball team can't come into it's favorite tavern for a few pitchers after a heavy session of arguing over strikes and balls, we have to wonder if the commission has gone as far as it can in its campaign.

Let's ban jukeboxes in bars. All those sad songs about "my baby left me" make getting bombed seem altogether too appropriate. Let's ban peanuts, popcorn and Slim Jims in bars. Everyone knows the salt in them just makes customers ache for another drink.

Let's ban bar stools. If people have to stand up, they will leave sooner. Let's ban signs for bars. If people can't find them, they can't get drunk in them.

Let's ban television sets in bars. How many extra drinks have been peddled to patrons who can't leave until they have seen if their favorite team can squeeze out a win? If they want to watch TV, let them do it at home.

Dancing? No way, Jose! They get all sweaty on the dance floor, then they go back to their seats and pound 'em down. Everybody knows that.

What else...? Of course! Let's ban rest rooms in bars. Just sit back and see how much alcohol will be abused then.

The mechanical approach to a solution for the growing problem of drunken drivers obviously will not work. Both alcohol and automobiles are longstanding traditions in American society. If, over the years, we have come to mix them together, it is understandable even if it is unforgiveable.

The real solution will be found when, through education, public consciousness is raised to the point where people realize that "happy hours" are not all that happy and that there is little glamour in the tragedies they can lead to.

Marking Time

One golden opportunity

By Mark White

If the poster to the right describes you, please contact the Newton Election Commission and ask about taking out papers for Mayor.

Yes, folks, it's that time of year again. Like the Olympics, mayoral elections come only once every four years, and next year is the chance for the city to come up with its own Mary Lou Retton, a new shining star.

The job for mayoral challenger is wide open. I mean, as of now, there is nobody running. None of the oldies and none of the new faces.

Nobody has heard from Bruce Marquis since the election four years ago, and the other guy in the primary - can't recall his name - was last seen attempting to become Newton's answer to Mike Barnicle. Rumor has it that since leaving politics, his life has become quite normal, even to the point of getting married.

So who's gonna run? Alderman Dick McGrath? He's thinking about it, but it's getting late. Local politicians? No interest.

The truth is that nobody thinks they can beat the present mayor, Theodore D. Mann. Well, if the National Democrats had that same attitude, Ronald Reagan would be unapposed. Instead, they sacrificed...oops, I mean nominated, Walter Mondale.

C'mon, there must be some brave soul out there. Look at the benefits. You meet a lot of people. You have an excuse to get out of the house every night. You don't have to plan your weekends.

You can leave the kids with the spouse. You'll eat at political dinners where the food is truly mediocre. You'll get your name in the paper, daily. You may even get a mention in "Marking Time."

Actually running for mayor is a great experience, and I honestly don't regret doing it; but, frankly, this guy is tough.

How about one of you who has always wanted to get into politics? You've got nothing to lose, and perhaps you can get your name out in the open to run for some office in the future.

Actually, this may be the year to try. You can run as a Newton "outsider" trying to change the present governmental system.

It worked for Ray Shamie. It worked for John Kerry, and it almost worked for Gary Hart.

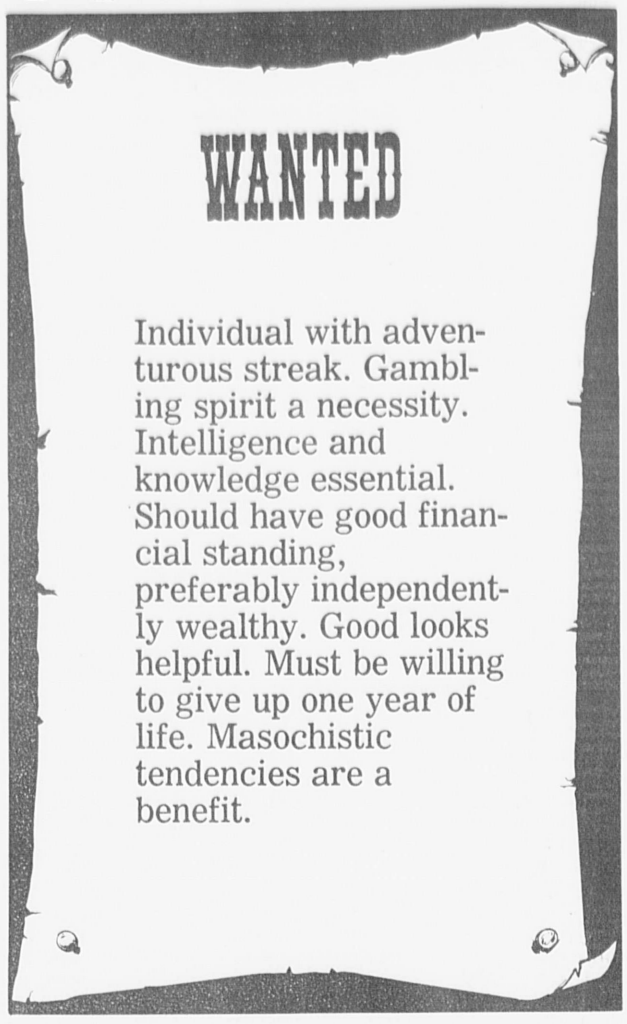

Here's your platform. You will not raise taxes under any circumstances. Turn government over to the ordinary people, not professional politicians. You'll eliminate the budget deficit (only, in our case we have a surplus - so you'll eliminate the surplus). You won't take any money from PACS, and you'll find a way to build a new library at no cost to the city.

Campaign funds? Don't worry. We can have a birthday party for your wife.

This is a golden opportunity for some aspiring politician. A clear shot.

So what if you can't win? It's an important part of democracy that there be a clear discussion of issues during an election. That principle must be preserved.

Besides, with nothing exciting going on in City Hall, I'm desperate for material.

Lawmakers face full slate

By Jerry Berger

The Massachusetts Legislature returns from summer vacation this week facing four major gubernatorial initiatives and a House leadership battle that could paralyze action until after the November elections.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis has said proposals to create a Massachusetts Development Bank, a Water Resources Authority and education and sentencing reforms top his legislative agenda for the fall.

Gubernatorial vetoes, drunken driving legislation and a Boston bailout proposal are also due on the calendar.

But lawmakers may devote more time in October to re-election efforts and the war for the House Speaker's gavel.

Both branches have met informally since approving an $8.1 billion state budget in July. Some vetoes from that budget package will be among the first items on the agenda.

House Minority Leader William G. Robinson, R-Melrose, has sought overrides of Dukakis vetoes setting aside a $31 million local aid increase and a $75 million tax cut proposal. But the Democratic leadership consistently succeeded in bottling the measures up.

House Speaker Thomas W. McGee, D-Lynn, may have considerably more trouble in keeping a rein on lawmakers in the fall session, as the challenge mounted by former Majority Leader George Keverian, D-Everett, appears close to toppling McGee after nine years of wielding the gavel.

Keverian claims to have lined up 73 out of the 81 votes for speaker he needs for election when the new legislative session begins in January. Some of those supporters include lawmakers once pledged to McGee who switched sides after a primary election that saw reform-minded candidates perform well.

But McGee, in a speech to the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce last week, showed he has no intention of surrendering.

Pointing to the defection of more than half of the Boston delegation, McGee told the businessmen he could scuttle a $100 million bailout proposal sought by Mayor Raymond L. Flynn. That measure is designed to provide what Flynn says is urgently needed revenue sources to keep the city's fiscal head above water.

Dukakis has steered clear of the leadership fight and concentrated his efforts on pushing for his legislative package. His lobbying effort included temporary "moves" of state government to the far corners of the commonwealth.

On top of his list is Massbank, which would float bonds to finance improvements in the state's aging roads, bridges and sewers. Dukakis has warned failure to act on the decaying infrastructure could put a halt to the state's economic surge.

The plan, first offered a year ago, has run into opposition from a number of business leaders, who object to new business taxes proposed to fund the initial $300 million investment. Some foes also question the measure's constitutionality.

Dukakis wants the Water Resources Authority created to take responsibility for water and sewers away from the Metropolitan District Commission. The new, semi-autonomous agency would sell bonds and impose user fees in what Dukakis says is an important step in cleaning up Boston Harbor pollution.

The primary opposition comes from lawmakers outside the sprawling greater Boston area MDC district, who are leery of the idea of creating another level of state bureaucracy.

An administration proposal to help close the per pupil spending gap among local school districts received a cool reception at a Joint Education Committee hearing last week.

House Chairman James Collins, D-Amherst, suggested the program that would provide $33 million in its first year is not sufficient to meet the problems.

But his Senate counterpart, Sen. Gerard D'Amico, D-Worcester, is confident a meeting of the minds will be reached on the broad education bill due for debate in November.

Other provisions of the extensive package would impose new academic standards, statewide testing and set an $18,000 minimum salary for teachers.

The final piece of the Dukakis package is a presumptive sentencing law that would require judges to work within guidelines or provide written explanations of why a lenient sentence was handed out.

That measure faces opposition from civil libertarians concerned over what they feel is a law that would tie judges' hands.

And the Senate will face an immediate effort by Sen. David Locke, R-Wellesley, for approval of a measure to raise the state's drinking age to 21. The measure has already passed the House.

Locke will be armed with a federal law, enacted this summer, that requires states to raise the drinking age or lose federal highway aid.

Reagan winning commonwealth by 8 points in recent poll

President Ronald Reagan is leading Walter F. Mondale in the heavily Democratic state of Massachusetts, according to a poll published in the Boston Globe.

The poll, published with less than six weeks to the election, put Reagan ahead of Mondale by 8 points, 51 to 43 percent, with 6 percent undecided.

Among those polled more likely to vote on election day Reagan did even better, with 52 percent for Reagan to Mondale's 42 percent. Six percent were undecided.

The poll was conducted by Harrison and Goldberg Inc., interviewing 500 people between Sept. 24 and Sept. 26. It gave a margin of error of plus or minus 5 percent.

"The race at this point seems to represent a triumph of personal appeal and personal qualities, such as leadership and vision, over issues," said pollster Irwin Harrison. He said the results suggest that Mondale has failed to present himself a credible alternative to Reagan.

The poll showed liberals and Democrats backing Mondale while conservatives and Republicans were solidly behind Reagan. Reagan also dominated the political center.

It showed Reagan with a 35 percent advantage over Mondale among independent voters — the most important swing vote in a general election in Massachusetts, the Globe said.

Moderate voters also prefered Reagan over Mondale by a margin of almost two to one.

Geographically, Reagan led in Essex, Middlesex, Norfolk and Worcester counties while Mondale led in Suffolk County and southeastern and western Massachusetts.

Of the women polled, 50 percent prefered the Mondale ticket to 43 percent for Reagan with 7 percent undecided. Men favored Reagan with 60 percent to 34 percent for Mondale with 6 percent undecided.

The newspaper poll also found the so-called Yuppies, college graduates who earn more than $30,000 and are under 45 years old, prefer Reagan 58 to 41 percent.

Reagan also was favored by Americans of Irish descent 50 to 42 percent and by Italian-Americans 64 to 32 percent.

America's mood

Bottom line is jobs for voters

BECKLEY, W.Va. — The last time Calvin Edwards voted in a presidential election, he was a member in good standing of the nation's middle class. He had been working full time for a decade as a bricklayer, and he was earning a tidy $23,000 a year to take care of his family obligations.

Then, he says, Ronald Reagan took office, and a deep economic recession followed. Construction in this part of West Virgina went on the skids, his company was forced to cease operations, and Edwards, along with a host of other unfortunate Americans, lost his job, his salary and his status.

He's been standing in unemployment lines since.

Dazed.

"One day I had a job," he says, "and the next day I didn't. I hardly knew what hit me. I'm a high school graduate, I've gone to college, but I haven't had steady work in 18 months. Now Reagan is running for re-election. He says the recession is over, and prosperity is back. Well, not for me."

Not for a lot of others, either. Calvin Edwards is among the sad army of people who went down in the recession and never came up. The Census Bureau reports that almost 3 million Americans were placed on the poverty rolls in 1982; it's thought that three out of four of them are still there.

Some of those people were marginally poor anyway, the government adds. But the decline has been more precipitous and more painful for many others. Calvin Edwards says he was making more than $20 an hour laying bricks and blocks; now he collects a scant $40 a week in unemployment compensation.

That means Edwards has dropped all the way out of the comfort zone. And he is therefore an illustration of a disturbing national trend this election year. Some government and private statisticians believe the roller coaster economy has created conditions that are eroding the venerable middle class.

The phenomenon is difficult to measure conclusively. Primarily because there is no all-purpose definition of the middle class. But researchers say that the number of people earning $15,000 to $35,000 annually, which is as good an interpretation as any, has declined almost 10 percent since 1970.

A similar drop has been recorded for people making $17,000 to $40,000. And the figures are repeated for other combinations below a ceiling of $50,000. The government says the news is not all bad, some middle wage earners have moved up, but the overriding tendency is definitely down and depressing.

That tendency is clearly evident at the West Virginia Department of Employment Security here in Beckley. Many of the people standing in the unemployment line are used to better things. They drive late model cars, they wear nice clothes; one woman says she's had to sell a second home to make ends meet.

The employment officials say that 10,000 people are currently looking for work in the region. Most of them are middle class. Larry Shyblosky, who is charge of finding jobs, says a lot of the people are coal miners and construction workers who have been drawing salaries of from $400 to $600 a week.

And there's the rub. Shyblosky says the recession wiped out thousands of the high paying positions here, and they've not all come back with better times. The state employment office has a regular list of job openings for clerks and fast-food handlers, but there's hardly anything for over $4 an hour.

So people like Calvin Edwards can't recover. And the good life slips farther away. Edwards says he has spent untold hours in the Beckley unemployment line, and he has filed and refiled the standard forms, to no good end: "The only real work that's available anymore is just part time or temporary."

He has a wife, three children and a drawer full of unpaid bills. He claims he can't get public assistance because he owns his small home. He says he has tried everything possible to get out of the mess, but, now, maybe, the best thing to do is vote in November and "hope things change with the election."

Edwards is a Democrat. So are a preponderance of others questioned in the unemployment line. One man says he is a Republican, but he goes with the flow: "I was for Reagan when I was employed, I'm for Mondale now that I'm not. It's no fun to pick up aluminum cans to earn a few pennies."

Two out of three agree with that. One woman says she used to play money on the commodities exchange, now she peddles 50-cent items at a Beckley flea market. Sixteen people add that they will vote for Mondale, five say they will vote for Reagan, and a husband and wife say it's nobody's business.

Calvin Edwards thinks people have to get help when they are knocked to the ground. And that may be one of the most appealing aspects of the ballot this time. "I don't think it's so much that the Democrats are for the little guy," he concludes. "But I damn well know the Republicans are against us."

Our democracy is 'at risk'

William James said, in 1897, that democracy is sustained only by the "civic genius" of the people; in his words "by the people knowing true men when they see them and preferring them as leaders to rabid partisans or empty quacks."

Democracy is at risk. In Reagan we are choosing someone who tells himself and us what we want to hear rather than what we need to know. We have become consumers of simplistic pseudo-solutions to problems which threaten our very existence.

What are we doing about the pollution of our ecological life-support systems? What are we doing about the presence of widespread starvation in the world? What are we doing about the threat of nuclear annihilation? Do we not realize that our so-called economic prosperity rests on an enormous increase in the federal deficit, a house-of-cards situation constructed to pay for weapons and policies which only increase these threats to our existence?

Where are our eyes and ears these days? Where are our values? Where is our ability to think constructively about these problems?

Instead of a national debate which addresses these issues thoughtfully, we are all climbing on the bandwagon of banality, hoping that "Happy Days Are Here Again."

I, for one, fear that those days are gone forever unless we begin soon, each of us, to search for real solutions to very real and present dangers.

If we don't, I suggest we each find a dinosaur to consult with about the experience of extinction.

'Pseudo-progress' in Corner

Ms. Dulude's article on Newton Corner (Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1984) prints the words of the very eloquent Anton Pruckner, who has long been cherished as "The Mayor of Newton Corner," an honorary term honoring his warmth and love for the Corner.

The article speaks of our northeast corner as "an array of roadways, highway signs, railroad tracks, and bustling commuters," neglecting entirely the fine old home nestled in behind the pseudo-progress slightly updated from the 1950's that are currently looming there. We haven't lavish lawns as have the south siders, but we don't want them. We have a close community that the commuters walk through and, mercifully, don't touch. Even our so-called transients tend to stay a long time, in groups and in young families, comfortable in the densely-shared space, in the workers' houses that sprang up starting in the early 19th century, the houses of which no mention was made in the article.

As for Alderman Sondra Shick, her concept of an economic center as the primary definition of a Newton Village is equally one-sided, equally ignorant of half of our history. We, too, have lived in Newton Corner for 16 years but on the nor[illegible]e, where there was once economic vitality in a commercial center borne of and supporting of the community of which Mr. Pruckner is so justifiably proud - and whose spirit remains undimmed despite the recent onslaught of such pseudo-progress as Alderman Shick being a representative of people she doesn't even acknowledge.

'20 Questions'

The following questions have been a problem to me. I cannot get any information from anyone at City Hall. Some department heads and workers at City Hall act like puppets of the mayor.

I would like to know if Mayor Mann of Newton is a millionaire. Why did the court rule that the taxpayers should pay his fee for his mistakes? He was the one who gave someone his paychecks to be deposited. What did the City of Newton do with the $6 million from the lotteries? Does the mayor own any part of the Tab, Tribune, or Graphic newspapers? Why do we spend so much money on the school? We spend $42 million. What are the pupils getting for this? How much money does the mayor already have in his campaign fund?

Commercial development is not in city's best interests

The city administration's argument that commercial development is the solution for stabilizing property taxes is short-sighted. Expansion of the tax base through commercial development has several flaws.

Increased commercial development will create higher demands on city services; eg. sewer, water, fire, police, and road maintenance. Traffic flow will increase to meet the demands of the employees. The city's assessment from the MBTA will increase to reflect the gain in ridership caused by new development.

As costs to the city rise, there will be a need to raise more revenue. This can be accomplished by several methods: increased commercial development, sales or city wage taxes, parking taxes, or increased property taxes. At some future point the city will reach its saturation point of development; therefore, the solution to stabilized property taxes is delaying the inevitability of increased property taxes.

Who benefits from this solution in the long run? Is it those individuals who trade in real estate either as investors or brokers? As the city of Newton changes from the city of gardens into the city of brick and concrete, those residents who lose their desired quality of life will be short-changed, or some will be forced to leave. The profit of this process will accrue to the realtor, since a realtor will realize a greater short-term profit by this destabilizing change.

I ask the readership: if a person who stands to profit through the indirect effect of commercial development, can that person expect the public to perceive that they are independent when voting on the critical issue of development? I publicly ask each member of the Board of Aldermen to examine their consciences prior to voting on commercial development issues from which they may gain indirectly.

As for spending the taxpayer's hard-earned money on a village stabilization study, why not employ the resources within city government to reach out ot the people, both business and residential, in each village and come to an equitable solution?

Who knows better our desires than we, the people, who live here ? Will we be given no choice, at great expense to ourselves?

The quality of life that brought us to Newton or, in my case, kept us in Newton is being deteriorated by this ongoing misconception that we must continually develop to survive.

Bathroom flap stalls housing

renovation work has also received approval from both the housing authority and the state Executive Office of Community Development, which is helping to fund the city's purchase of the property.

"As far as we're (NCDA) concerned, it's okay. Everybody's happy," he told FinCom.

In an apparent attempt to compensate for the home's bathroom problems, Peter Kasch, Barkan's project manager at the Fairway site, has agreed to shave $5,000 off the original $115,000 purchase price offered the city.

Kasch could not be reached yesterday for comment on the Langley Road dispute, but Coletti, along with Alderman Carol J. Robinson, former chairman of the city's planning and development board, appear to be assuming an uncompromising stance.

"Only a single adult with one child could live there, not a family. That unit is so small you can't even put a double bed in it. It's got the same old fixtures and the stench of urine on the first floor is unbelievable," said Robinson, adding that for "all the money" Barkan will make off the Fairway Condominiums, he should be able to meet aldermen's demands.

Quatrale has said that Barkan bought the house for $95,000 seven months ago and has since put another $40,000 into renovating it, including repairs to a gaping hole in the home's roof, rehabiltation of the kitchens and removal of asbestos in the building's basement, and does not want to spend any more money on the site.

"There comes a time when you just have to take a stand....I wouldn't let anybody live in that house. This guy is trying to pull the wool over our eyes," Coletti said.

"It's not a family apartment, you don't have to be an expert to see that," according to Robinson.

Quatrale said he is hoping the dispute will be resolved when Cash and/or Barkan appear before FinCom at its next meeting, but Barkan still owes the city two other units to fulfill the "10 percent" requirement placed on his Fairway project.

Concern over the ambiguous law has mounted recently, leading both planning officials and aldermen to criticize the ordinance's failure to place clear expectations on developers and its allowance for off-site compliance.

At the same time, planning and housing officials are saying the shortage of moderate-income and elderly housing here is reaching the crisis stage, thanks, in part, to the city's rapidly increasing property values which make it more profitable for developers to build luxury townhouse or condominium units.

Currently, 390 low-income families and 140 low-income elderly residents are on the Newton Housing Authority's waiting list for subsidized housing here, according to city housing officials.

Board stymies village study again

McGrath kicked off the deliberations by saying the proposal would put residents at "a distinct disadvantage" when dealing with potential developers and bemoaned the indefinite price tag supplied by Canner.

"You don't begin funding a project until you know what the final cost is. If you tell someone they can spend as much as they want, they'll go ahead and spend as much as they want," he said.

Ward 3 Alderman Richard J. Bullwinkle said he heard Mayor Mann warn of dire threats to the financial state of the city two weeks ago, "yet we seem to be knee-deep in money recently.

"The real danger I see in this is that the neighborhoods have another enemy and the enemy is themselves through their city agencies," he said.

Ward 3 Alderman-at-Large Robert L. Tennant asked his colleagues to "give the thing a fair, decent trial," and Ward 1 Alderman-at-Large Sondra L. Shick pointed out that the study would be used "as a tool" to create zoning ordinances that are adapted to the distinctive nature of each commercial center.

Canner said he would also come back to aldermen with the private consultants' final bids for the package, she added.

Ward 5 Alderman Michael A. Malec and his at-large counterpart Paul E. Coletti both told aldermen that any move to put a spending ceiling on the proposal would be "unrealistic," adding that those in favor of the limit might just as well vote against the project.

Ward 1 Alderman-at-Large Bruce B. Carmichael rose to support McGrath and Bullwinkle, saying that approval of the $80,000 with no limit would leave aldermen little choice but to go ahead with the project no matter what the final cost.

"You don't put a cake in the oven and pull it out half-baked...There's studies worth $75,000 going nowhere right now. One of them is in my own ward," he said in reference to a $23,000 Newton Corner Revitalization Plan study completed in May 1979, a $6,000 Petee Square Improvement Plan released in September 1979 and the $17,000 Nonantum Land Use Plan finished in September 1982.

Ward 6 Alderman-at-Large Rodney Barker reminded his colleagues that aldermen would retain control over the conclusions reached by the study because the board has the sole power to change zoning ordinances, and Ward 7 Alderman-at-Large Verne Vance said it was "inaccurate" to suggest residents are "helpless" in the face of developers' proposals.

Ward 1 Alderman Ronald A. Marini said of the "blank check" item, "I hate to see us spending money like this...We're closing schools, we're spending money like water. It's an embarassing situation."

Ward 6 Alderman George E. Mansfield told his colleagues, "If done correctly, the study will encourage commercial development only in places that will not destroy the integrity of our villages...I'm as satisfied as I can be at this time," and used Carmichael's "cake" analogy to compare the project to "buying the cookbook that will tell us the recipes we might try."

After Creem defended the proposal, Ward 3 Alderman-at-Large Matthew Jefferson asked aldermen to approve the item in order to "open up the window of knowledge and get the breeze of what might be...A study will not destroy the neighborhoods. No study has done that."

Church, Fanueil Hall, old Lowell mills and the North End. And although they agree the latter site is "nice," they won't go so far to say it's just like the villages and piazzas back home.

When they're not traveling, the young Italians are studying at Newton North High School, where they mingle with American peers and learn to study and think in English.

Most of them have adapted so well to their surroundings, it is hard to tell that they are not natives of a neighborhood like this.

Roberta Ricciolini is clad in an "American Yachting Club" sweatshirt and plaid Bermuda shorts. She has just flopped herself down on the couch beside Lorenzo Chiaroni, whose jeans and U.S.A. t-shirt indicate his easy adoption of American life.

But it's not just American clothing they like.

"I like fast food; hamburg, french fries," begins Lorenzo, very seriously. "And apple pie," chimes in Roberta, laughing.

"They were very impressed to see the chains of fast food restaurants, you know like Wimpy's and Burger King," Clara Vella explains.

This is the third year Vella, an English teacher at the Liceo Scientifico in Florence, has accompanied her students to Newton and the Boston area, where she says the Italian youngsters are able to "immerse themselves in the tradition of another people; to define the roots of another culture."

Jenny DeVito also throws in some occasional Italian conversation to explain to the students exactly what the "American correspondent" is asking.

DeVito is a Newton resident whose two sons are acting as hosts to Attilio Paulucci. John DeVito says there are a number of things which make having a temporary Italian brother interesting.

"It's fun teaching them how to do things they've never done," John says. "They're amazed that we can drive cars when we're only sixteen or so. They can't drive until they're 18. And they can't drive big cars until they're 21."

Although John has visited most of the museums and historical points of interest in Italy, where his grandmother and aunts live, he is looking forward to going back next year, because he'd "like to see how they have fun."

This spring, through the efforts of Newton North language teacher Maria Vallone (who obtained a masters in Florence), several students like John will go to Italy to see, smell and taste all of the things their Italian guests have talked about.

Vallone is a veteran Newton teacher of 12 years who started the secondary exchange program three years ago. It is the first of its kind in the country.

The Italian language instructor has wanted the program for about 10 years now and calls it "a dream come true. There's something magical about Florence," Vallone says.

It seems there's something magical about the relationships the Italian and American students have developed here as well.

Most didn't have the time tonight to stop and talk with the reporter; with only three days left before they have to go home, the students were squeezing in all of the American swimming, rock music and friendship they could. And of course this was one of the last chances they had to indulge wholeheartedly in a classic American favorite — pizza.

Comm. Ave. repaving to start in Auburndale

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Faced with a four-year wait for federal funds to reconstruct Commonwealth Avenue, officials here have gone ahead with a $439,000 project that should completely resurface the city's most famous street by the end of November.

The largely stop-gap repaving effort began Monday as work crews began the task of filling the cracks that have spider-webbed throughout the 84-year-old, five-and-a-half mile roadway.

According to Public Works Commissioner James L. Hickey, the actual resurfacing effort, which is funded through two state transporation department bond issues, will begin in one week at the Auburndale end of Commonwealth Avenue.

Residents can expect floating detours requiring them to use the companion "Carriage Road" as an alternate route while the project progresses toward city's Boston border.

The design of the street has remained relatively unchanged since it was first built, but vehicular and pedestrian use has increased dramatically, creating "many safety and operational deficiencies" that will eventually have to be addressed by an Urban Systems Project (USP) reconstruction effort worth about $5 million, Hickey said.

However, "based on past experience with the slowness of progress on Urban Systems Projects" and the fact that the city is expecting USP work to begin soon in Newton Corner, West Newton, Thompsonville and Hammond Street, an effort of that magnitude will not begin for four years.

According to "a realistic time line for full reconstruction" outlined by Hickey, the middle section of Commonwealth Avenue from Washington Street to Centre Street will be reconstructed in 1988.

In 1990, the project will be extended easterly to encompass the areas between Centre Street and Grant Avenue and westerly to include the section between Washington Street and Auburndale Square.

The two final sections, from Auburndale Square to Route 128 and from Grant Avenue to the Boston line, are scheduled to be rebuilt in 1992, he added.

"In view of the projected time frame for full reconstruction (i.e., four to eight years), it is clear that interim measures must be taken both to insure public safety and also to retard further pavement deterioration and the escalating maintenance costs resulting therefrom," Hickey said.

BC guards urged to be cautious

Newton Police Sgt. James O'Donnell, who serves as the department's community service officer, said BC Police Chief Watson conferred with Chief William F. Quinn about arming the campus police and Quinn gave his full support to the plan.

"Because of the fact that BC owns a lot of individual dwellings in that area...their officers, who are trained as full-fledged police officers, would now provide more security for people in the area," O'Donnell said.

Since patrols routes for the BC officers often overlap with those of the Newton police, officials from both departments believe the armed officers will now help to play a key role in deterring crime in the area of the school's two Garden City campuses.

According to Barton, perimeter patrol routes for the Chestnut Hill campus include St. Thomas More Drive, Beacon Street, Hammond Street, Stone Avenue, Tudor Road and Commonwealth Avenue, while, at the BC Law School, there are two round-the-clock patrols, one vehicular route which uses Centre Street, Colby Street and Mill Street, and one foot patrol throughout the immediate campus area.

One BC police officer, who declined to give his name, said yesterday he thought the move toward arming his colleagues represented "a deterrent mostly.

"Anywhere you are on campus, there's potential for a crime like robbery to happen, especially now that we have three automatic bank tellers spread throughout the campus. I certainly don't want to see anybody have to use them (the guns). Most of the incidents we handled are brawls. They're settled by physical restraint," he said.

Tom Tracy, a 68-year-old Brighton native who works as the school's Beacon Street gate attendant, had mixed feelings on the new policy.

"I think that at night there's a possibility (armed officers) would be helpful, but I don't see it needed at all during the daytime," Tracy said.

Malec said he has "a little bit of unease" with the new policy, because he doesn't know "if there was an adequate discussion about it throughout the University community and because he doesn't "really perceive the kind of security threats" to BC polic officers that would warrant arming them.

"I do think BC has been trying to upgrade and professionalize their police force...I'm certainly in favor of having highly professional, well-equipped, properly trained police officers. I just don't know if, on a university campus, firearms are necessary to that end," he added.

A majority of the BC students interviewed yesterday at the school's Chestnut Hill campus said they "feel safer" now that their police force is armed, but several also echoed Malec's uncertainty.

"I don't think guns are going to stop anyone. It might make them think twice, but I don't think it's necessary. There could be a fatal mistake some night," said Acton native Amy Kelly, an 18-year-old freshman majoring in special education.

"I think it will definitely make me feel safer. Last year, I heard about a girl getting raped near where I live now. That kind of thing really shoots your anxiety level up," the psychology student said.

"It's a good idea. If it deters crime, I'm all for it," chimed in 19-year-old Heather McCauley, a Florida native studying marketing at BC.

An editorial in last week's edition of "The Heights" also applauded the move for its likely deterrent effect, but asked for increased caution on the part of the BC police force.

"While the potential for tragedy has...increased, the potential for violent crime may have been reduced because of the use of guns as a deterrent...extreme caution is even more imperative now that the police have been given the capacity to use these firearms," the paper said.

Art Lottery awards $10,300 in grants

AUBURNDALE — The Newton Arts Lottery Council has announced that 14 grants totalling $10,300 will be distributed to artists and cultural organizations in the community through the Massachusetts Arts Lottery project.

Council Chairperson Linda Plaut said the following applications approved by the Newton Arts Lottery Council have been certified by the Massachusetts Arts Lottery Council at the State House in Boston:

Newton Arts Center, Eleanor Rubin, Jane Chiong, All Newton Music School, Newton Bodyworks, Jill Andrea Karlin, Hospice of the Good Shepherd, Susan Page, Daniel O. Howell, Newton Lower Falls Improvement Association, Emily Konian, Marie J. White, Newton Symphony and Newton Free Library, All Newton Summer Show.

In making the announcement, Plaut noted that the current grants awarded statewide have topped $1.5 million. "These funds will help to enhance the cultural life of our community," said Chairperson Plaut. "With Arts ways have been in use. The project is expected to be completed through the use of wood additions during school vacations.

The board voted 20-1 with three absent to approve a $45,000 proposal that will produce a running track suitable for competition at South High by next spring without interfering in other sports using the school's athletic complex.

Money was also included in the request to create a long-promised buffer zone of trees that should shield Brandeis Road residents from noise created by events at the field.

Alderman Robert L. Shuman voted against the resurfacing plan, saying it was "a waste of money" because the track would just have to be reconstructed again in five to seven years.

Alderman passed a request for $5,000 worth of renovations at the Newtonville Branch Library by a 18-1 margin with five members absent from the vote.

The work at the Newtonville drop-in center, which should be done by October 15, is needed to make space for 45 seniors left in limbo by the closing of the Beethoven drop-in program at the Zervas School due to school consolidations made earlier this year.

With the Beethoven program closed on the 10th anniversary of the creation of the drop-in center program, the city now has no senior citizen meeting place south of Commonwealth Avenue.

Alderman Richard J. McGrath cast the lone vote against the appropriation, saying that it would "crowd twice the amount of people into an already overcrowded facility" and calling on "the administration" to find a south side location.

In a related move, alderman took a unanimous voice vote that passed a resolution calling on Mayor Theodore D. Mann and the Council of Aging "to continue to actively seek a suitable site" for a south side center and directing the mayor to make that need known to developers interested in acquiring surplus municipal buildings, including the former Hyde and Oak Hill elementary schools.

Transportation, overcrowding criticized

School consolidation off to a rough start

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Despite recent reports that the transition of students into consolidated schools has been smooth and adequate, complaints issued simultaneously by many parents of the pupils point to the contrary.

Parents of children attending Mason-Rice and Zervas — two consolidated schools receiving the largest number of students — say poor transportation, overcrowding, special needs violations, and indequate facilities are making the transition unnecessarily uncomfortable for the incoming students.

School administrators, in turn, have responded that most of the problems arising during the first few weeks of school have been resolved and that many are indicative of difficulties which accompany school openings anywhere. Other concerns have not even been brought to their attention, they say.

One of the overriding issues has been transportation.

Shortly after school began, a bus transporting children home from the Mason-Rice school got lost, ultimately ending up on Rte. 9. During that time, parents say, the driver swore at students, branches and leaves were coming into the windows and what should have been a five or ten-minute ride took almost an hour. Another bus missed 26 kids waiting at a stop, say parents, who also contend that there has not been adequate seating, proper discipline nor monitoring (assuring sixth graders don't bother elementary school children) on the vehicles.

"The first few days the bus was late. The fourth day it barely got there at all. That's outrageous," said Mason-Rice parent Barry Pomerantz. "The fact that they could not arrange a bus with only four stops is very upsetting. This is not a poor community and there's no reason why it should happen at all."

Director of Support Services Roy G. Cornelius said administrators have since met with the president of the bus company and have taken other measures to assure all drivers know the routes. In addition, the support services director said he has followed the Mason-Rice bus on its morning and afternoon routes to see that it arrived on time.

He also claims there is no overcrowding. "I counted the kids myself," he said. "The most I have seen are 59. The bus is able to seat 65."

Cornelius has met with parent representatives and the Mason-Rice principal to address the transportation issue.

Although he said there were initially several problems with the busing system, the support services director added that no complaints have been received lately. "To the best of our knowledge, the problems have been settled," Cornelius said.

> 'It is frustrating to see logical arguments turned down then to see the exact consequences that were predicted occur. The decision making process is not a logical one and not a fair one.'
> Barry Pomerantz

> 'We feel education in Newton is going down the toilet. We're tired of hearing how well everything is going. It's time to stop the masquerade.'
> Cathy Scott

But Pomerantz sees the recent resolution of the problem as only temporary. "They did something about it because they got heat about it," he said, adding that contracting with a private bus company does not bode well for future reliability. "This is what happens with private employees. They don't have any loyalty to the city. There will be another breakdown in communications. I can see the handwriting on the wall."

Lack of space and overcrowding also top the list of parent grievances.

Two first-grade classes of 29 kids at the Mason-Rice school, a kindergarten now being held in the nurse's room at Zervas and two separate classes being held in one Zervas room, are some of the specific situations they cite. Parents also contend that an auditorium at Zervas which now serves as the school's library does not have adequate space.

"There are 29 kids in the first grade," said Scott. "We were told there would be no more than 23. The kids are crawling the walls there."

"You can't walk through the space," Ann Rawls said of the kindergarten classes at Zervas. An anonymous parent added that going from 17 kids in the Hyde kindergarten to 27 in the Mason-Rice first grade is too much for the students. "That is too large," she said. "We don't want our children to continue in these large classes."

Another consequence of crowded classrooms, parents say, is that special needs children have not been properly attended. In the transition from Hyde to Mason-Rice, plans for the special needs children were misplaced and only recently found, says Scott, and first grade journals have still not been located. Ann Rawls, who actively involved in the "Campaign for Village Schools," said she has received a complaint that one particular special needs child has been ignored, because the teacher has been too busy.

And there have been complaints about "inadequately equipped" kindergarten and second-grade classrooms at the Mason-Rice school. "They knew last March how many students they were expecting," said one parent who wished to remain anonymous. "If by Friday of this week every classroom is not equipped, it is totally unforgiveable."

Dr. Hines says that if there were missing items or a lack of materials, the principals should notify his office. He personally has not received any complaints regarding the issues. "I'm sure the special education office keeps duplicate records," he added.

Several of the parents who lodged specific complaints were often quick to add that they felt their children would eventually adjust. They hold no fault with principals and teachers, but say they are critical of and resentful toward a school committee and city they say failed to plan adequately for consolidation needs.

"The school department really didn't care," was a comment made by many, including Barry Pomerantz, who added, "It is totally political. It is frustrating to see logical arguments turned down then to see the exact consequences that were predicted occur. The decision making process is not a logical one and not a fair one.

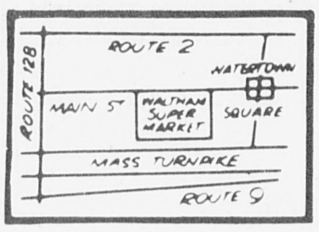

"There is some healing," said James Anderson. "But we feel that the kids aren't getting the same treatment as the rest of the city.

"We feel education in Newton is going down the toilet," Cathy Scott said. "We're tired of hearing how well everything is going. It's time to stop the masquerade."

Furniture investments

Decorating your home can be an exciting and enjoyable experience, but did you know that it can also be a smart way to invest your money? Quality furniture incorporates hand craftsmanship, attention to detail, prima veneers, inlaid moldings, intricate carving and the finest materials available' All this combines to become a work of art. In upholstery ' look for fine tailoring, seating comfort' sturdy construction and elegant fabrics. And, furniture of quality need not be exorbitantly expensive; sometimes the difference in price can be minimal, especially when you consider the life span of the piece.

Whether you are starting out in a new home or redecorating a favorite room, begin witH a floor plan. It is far easier to move furniture on paper than in an actual room. This will also save costly mistakes of choosing furniture that "looks" as though it will fit. Some prefer the interior design look of clean, uncluttered contemporary, others the eclectic mix of traditional or Country French, but whatever your choice, here are some tips to make your decorating easier.

Interior designer Sharon Meadows of Hickory Furniture Co. advises incorporating your own preferences into a workable environment; one that reflects your tastes and interests as well as your needs.

First, she credits comfort as probably your most important consideration. It's necessary to weigh the needs of your entire family when making decorating choices. Consider the personality and needs of the other family members. Confused about colors? Use colors that everyone can enjoy. As a guide, Meadows recommends a fabric pattern that will coordinate with wall covering. Choose colors from the pattern to use as accents.

Good atmosphere calls for proper planning. Convenience can be achieved by arranging each area in conversational groupings. By doing this, you will create a balanced, cohesive mood to the room. If you are an active family, provide space for hobbies and storage. Or, are you avid entertainers? This lifestyle would call for a living room that could accommodate large groups and a separate, elegant dining room for sit-down dinners.

Decorating doesn't have to be expensive or elaborate. If you do many things yourself, you can beautify your home at a relatively low cost. Besides, do-it-yourself projects can be fun for the entire family.

When choosing major pieces of furniture it is important to look for quality and workmanship. The money spent here is your . investment. Not only will you enjoy the beauty and usefulness of the piece for many years to come, you will also be investing in a family heirloom to pass on to future generations. Finish your scheme with quality decorative accessories, and add luxurious green plants to achieve interest and warmth. They will grow and prosper and help your home reflect the interest and attention you have invested.

Solar savings

Major advances have been made in drawing on the heat from the sun as an alternate energy source instead of further depleting our exhaustible fossil fuel resources.

Solar power, of course, is here right now. It is already heating water in many homes and buildings, also airspace.

And prospects are bright that perhaps in the not-too-distant future, the sun's rays will be converted directly into electricity through a somewhat complicated means known as the photovoltaic process. Preliminary experimental pilot projects have already demonstrated that the latter can be done, that it works and that it offers fascinating potential promise.

A Wisconsin consulting engineering firm a year ago completed a $1.5 million expansion of corporate offices, expecting that extensive passive features of their new design would provide about 60 percent of the light and 40 percent of the heat required by the facility. The estimates were wrong — far too conservative.

It was figured the conservation features would save the firm about $15,500 a year in utility costs. The firm has carefully tracked its utility bills and finds savings may total nearly $40,900 in electricity costs, figuring area rates at 6.4 cents per kilowatt-hour. The new structure is attached to an existing old building of about the same size' 33,000 square feet, and the experts discovered the passive building used about 600,900 fewer kwhs than the old building.

The new structure utilizes a variety of state-of-the-art energy-saving features. An extensive light-dimming system was installed, which the manufacturer estimated could save $4,000 a year. Another feature is an efficient daylighting arrangement designed into the building. For instance, a light shelf lined with reflective surface directs sunlight into office space. That's a wrinkle new to me.

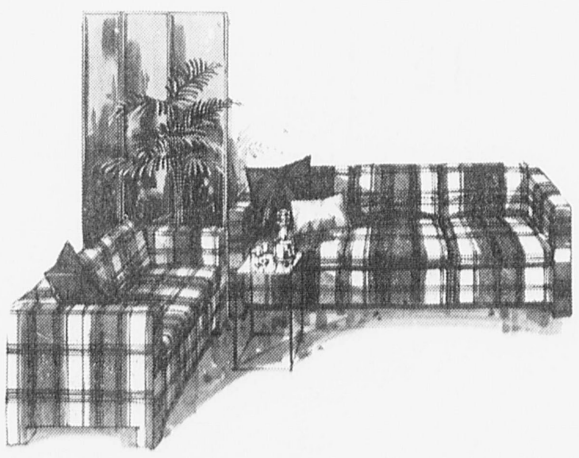

Installation of this solar system added about 5 percent to the building's cost and the total extra expense, including floors and walls, came to around $70,000. Indications now are that the passive system's efficiency is significantly exceeding expectations. Thus, the pay-back may be even faster than the six years originally predicted.

If a sophisticated solar system works this well for a large structure, the benefits could be proportionately advantageous for the average dwelling. Or the cost effectiveness might be even greater because the government allows a tax write-off for residential energy conservation installations. At any rate, with the progress in refining solar systems, the future energy outlook brightens.

Five features that make REAL Credit the best way for homeowners to borrow.

1. We give you substantial credit for owning a home. REAL Credit (Real Estate Asset Line of Credit) is a line of credit that enables qualified homeowners to obtain up to $100,000. And while many other banks only let you borrow up to 75% of the appraised equity value of your home, we allow up to 80%.

2. You can use the money for whatever you want. Whether you need money for home improvements, college tuition, a new car, a vacation—virtually anything—you can use REAL Credit money from BayBanks. In fact, you can use it for several different purposes at the same time, if you'd like.

3. You can use it whenever you want. With REAL Credit, you can start using the money any time you want. And your REAL Credit line is available for your use for ten years. Moreover, at the BayBanks, we won't require you to borrow before you're ready. And you pay interest only on the funds you use, regardless of the amount of your approved credit line.

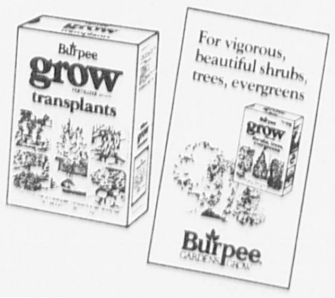

4. You pay lower interest rates. REAL Credit features one of the best rates available—just 1½% over BayBanks Prime Rate, adjusted monthly. For example, if our Prime Rate is 12½%, the corresponding REAL Credit Annual Percentage Rate would be just 14½%. In most cases, your rate will be lower than rates on ordinary loans.

5. Something better than the rest. The best feature of REAL Credit is the overall package; it's a winning combination you won't find elsewhere. In addition, we offer a monthly statement, special checks for easy access, plus very attractive repayment terms. It all adds up to the very best.

Trying to find a new entertaining idea?
Have a wine and cheese party

By James McCormack

Are you trying to come up with a new entertainment idea? Something light and refreshing for you and your friends? Have a wine and cheese party! It can be casual or formal, large or small and what goes better than an enjoyable evening of sampling wine and cheese along with friends? A wine and cheese tasting party falls in between the dinner or cocktail party and is simple to do with a little planning.

Organizing the party will take a little advance planning. First, draw up a list of what you will need

- four or five kinds of cheese
- assorted wines nad several non-achoholic beverages for non-drinkers
- French or Italian bread
- assorted crackers
- Baskets for the bread and crackers
- several forks and knives
- napkins
- plates
- wooden toothpicks
- wine glasses, red and white or all purpose
- boards or trays for the cheeses

You should select 4 or 5 different cheeses ranging in variety from mild to sharp and a blend of textures from creamy smooth to firm. Purchase the cheese five days before the party, that way it will be fresh, but it won't have time to ripen before you serve it. Cheese should be served at room temperature so remove the cheese from the refrigerator an hour before serving.

Slice the cheese into bite size pieces or place wedges on cutting boards with knives for a more casual do-it-yourself atmosphere. Advise your guests that cheese should be eaten from mild to medeium to sharp.

The wine that you choose should complement the cheese. A general rule of thumb is - the milder the cheese, the more mellow the wine; the sharper the cheese ; the more robust the wine. Generally white wines, rose and sparkling wines should be chilled for three hours before serving. Red wines are best served at room temperature and should be opened an hour before serving to allow it a chance to breathe. When purchasing your wine and cheese allow for a 1/2 pound of cheese and a 1/2 bottle of wine per guest.

Bread and crackers are essential to a successful party, not only are they the perfect compliments to cheese, but they also "clear the palate" between samplings of wine and cheese. You may wish to purchase wine crackers, these are made especially for clearing the palate in between different kinds of wine. Following is a list of cheese and the complimenting wines:

Time sharing

In these inflationary days, it makes good "Dollars and Sense" for families trying to reconcile travel and vacation plans with tight budgets to take advantage of resort time-sharing, a European approach to multiple ownership of resort accommodations that is catching on in this country.

Vacation plans for the next 25 years can be nailed down for annual one-, two- or three-week stays — or whatever period the individual wants — just by signing a time-sharing lease. This concept eliminates the need for a costly purchase to own a vacation home that may remain largely unoccupied year-round.

"The main factor for the attention time-sharing is getting is probably the fact that it is inflation-proof," says Ed Franke, vice president of sales and marketing for Club Cala de Palmas in Puerto Rico. "A buyer pays a onetime purchase price which covers only the actual time that he or she plans to use the unit.

"Another reason why this European tradition is gaining widespread interest among

One way to afford an expensive vacation

North Americans,'' he adds, ''is the minimal yearly maintenance fee and the low prices, compared to what it would cost to buy a comparable vacation home.''

Time-sharing is also attractive, Franke notes, because room costs are normally a fraction of rates charged in comparable hotels, and there is no need to worry about renting a year-round vacation residence to others. Time-share units can also be swapped for similar accommodations at outstanding resorts worldwide.

Prices vary on the time-share options. For example, at Club Cala de Palmas, furnished one- and two-bedroom luxury units range in price from $5,500 to $14,500 for a one-week period over 25 years. The annual maintenance is $150 to $200.

And time-share resort owners can rest assured that they will enjoy magnificent scenery and recreational facilities, such as golf courses, tennis courts, marinas, equestrian centers and pools.

Franke advises potential buyers of time-shares to explore all aspects of an opportunity thoroughly before making a purchase. ''There are many ramifications and variations to a time-sharing arrangement,'' he says, ''and reputable firms or agencies will assist you in making your deals and understanding the terms.''

Half a house

If the adage holds that half a loaf is better than none, does it logically follow that buying half a house is better than renting?

Two unrelated couples thought it worth a try, and came up with a creative financial arrangement without the benefit of a real estate broker's help.

Several years ago, Cathy and Leon bought two houses, one to live in, the other, as a short-term investment.

On the other hand, Ellen and John wanted to buy a house but they couldn't come up with an adequate down payment to buy anything close to the center of the city where they both work.

''We found that our combined incomes put us in a high tax bracket, but our take-home pay was too small to cover $1,200 monthly mortgage payments. Neither could we comfortably manage $800 a month rent,'' John said.

Then the housing market hit the skids. And Cathy and Leon felt they had to sell the speculation house to keep up the payments on the house they lived in, and John and Ellen thought this was just the right time to buy.

''We had looked at the house Cathy and Leon wanted to sell and liked it. They were asking $90,000. We couldn't swing it at that price. And we said so,'' John said.

As they left the premises, Cathy rather offhandedly, said: ''How about buying half of the house?'' John picked up on it. ''We didn't want to be house poor,'' Ellen said. ''Somehow, this seemed a way we could eat our lemon mousse and have it, too.''

Agreeing to buy half the equity, the couples then had to figure out a satisfying and pleasant business arrangement.

Instead of hiring two lawyers under an adversary system, each trying to get the most for his clients, the four hired one lawyer who represented the interests of all of them.

Cathy and Leon owed $65,500 on the house which had been appraised at $90,000. Subtracting the loan from the price, they divided the remaining $24,500 into four equal shares. Ellen's and John's share together was $12,250, and this they put up front. ''That was our down payment,'' John said.

But John and Ellen would live in the house. So John suggested, for the privilege of him and his wife living there, that they buy a half share from each of the other two. Now they became renters in the house they partially owned. ''It doesn't mean we own more of the house. We pay more because we live here,'' John explained.

The advantages were obvious: they all share in the equity, they all will get a tax break and John and Ellen have a permanent place to live that they can affor2. Principal, interest, taxes and insurance total $813 a month.

But the ''what ifs'' had to be solved for peace of mind. ''What if we wanted to build a 12-foot black tower atop the house?'' John asked.

The lawyer suggested that major expenses, such as faulty plumbing or wiring be shared by the group, but cosmetic improvements such as painting the house, be borne by the renters.

John and Ellen moved into the house and botb are confident the arrangement will work. ''I think if I were advising anyone about a deal like this,'' John said, ''I would tell them to find compatible people first, then strike a deal.''

Newton Lower Falls

'Geography' determined its character

By Suzanne M. Dulude,

Asst. News Editor

It is an island -- bordered on three sides by the Charles River and on the fourth by "America's Technology Highway."

A satellite of the city, Newton Lower Falls geographical situation is what gives it its unique character, according to John Stewart, Lower Falls resident and former alderman.

"It's a very cohesive community, because of its relatively small size ... and its geography," Stewart said. "It's a real neighborhood in the true sociological sense."

A manufacturing community in its heyday, Lower Falls mills first took advantage of the river's power in 1704. John Hubbard and Caleb Church were partners in an iron works constructed above the rapids, and a decade and a half later, the Hubbard family added fulling, saw and corn mills to the enterprise.

By the close of the 18th century, 10 families resided in the village and worked in its industries, that included a tannery, nail factory and snuff mills by this time.

However, the real fame of early Lower Falls industry was papermaking, which was introduced by John Ware in 1790. Yet demand for water power was more than the river could provide to the papermaking process and the saw and fulling mills. A battle for water rights ensued and, in 1816, the first of many formal agreements granted the right to the paper companies. At the time, there were four paper mills sharing the water power of the upper dam in Lower Falls.

According to a report entitled "The Spirit of Lower Falls," written by Alison Shapiro in 1980, "The citizens of Lower Falls successfully fought the intrusion of the Boston and Worcester Railroad into their community. The mill owners used barges to transport their goods and feared the competition of the railroads. By 1840, however, a change was desired, and a branch from the already established railroad was constructed."

As with many of the other villages, the railroad brought about the peak of productivity. In Lower Falls, where the factories were in the forefront of technology, the papermaking industry boomed. Mills in Lower Falls supplied paper for much of the manufacture of books throughout the country at this time.

The development of village life grew from the new-found prosperity. Washington and Concord streets were lined with cottages and tenements. St. Mary's Episcopal Church, the oldest standing church in Newton, was built in 1813 on land donated by paper mill owner Samuel Brown. And due to the noteriety of fires in paper mills, the first volunteer bucket brigade was organized -- the Cataract Engine Company.

Yet, the prosperity of the 1850s gave way to severe competition which, following the introduction of cheaper paper made from abundant woodpulp, caused prices to fall so low that some mills were forced to liquidate or convert.

Apart from the industrial development of the time was the establishment and growth of Newton-Wellesley Hospital. Originally incorporated as the Newton Cottage Hospital in 1881, the facility was considered an experimental laboratory, which provided a forum for young physicians.

The 20th century in Lower Falls has been relatively quiet, as the village has taken on much of the residential character of the rest of the city.

Despite the destruction of many of the early mill houses, the construction of Route 128 gave Lower Falls greater accessibility. Although 24-year-resident Evelyn Budge embitteredly remarked, "We've just watched it (the village) be destroyed. We (the residents) had no clout," she admits that it has made the Lower Falls "handily located."

Budge characterized 20th century Lower Falls by saying: "This village is like an expanded family; everybody helps everyone else," despite their differences.

Being the wife of a former alderman, Donald Budge, and having worked with the Historical Society, she feels "the size of the village makes a difference."

Both Budge and Stewart mentioned the "Falls Balls," the village's annual summer festival, as exemplary of the village cohesiveness. "It never seems to lose its popularity," Budge said, "It has an appeal for all ages -- bingo for the elderly, games and amusements for the kids, food, the tennis tournament and it even involves merchants."

Fifty-one-year-old Stewart summed up his feelings for his bailiwick by saying, "As corny as it sounds, there's a friendliness and a neighborliness here."

(Next week the Graphic will explore the past of the the city's fourth village, Newton Centre.)

Papermaking was made by a hand process up until the 19th century.

The papermaking process

During the early years, paper was made by a hand process developed centuries earlier by the Chinese. Cotton or lined rags were softened and poured onto framed wire screens which allowed the water to drain through, leaving a film of pulp behind. Pulp adhering to the screen was peeled off, pressed between sheets of felt, and then hung to dry. The hand process, from beginning to end, took three months to ready a sheet of paper for use.

The Hollander machine, invented in Holland before 1725, mechanized the washing and beating process. This machine came into use in America about 1775. A bleaching process, making possible the production of white paper, was devleoped in 1774 by a German chemist.

The invention of the Fourdrinier machine in 1807 dramatically increased the production of paper. This machine manufactured paper by the roll, ready for use within a day. Named for its financiers, the Fourdrinier machine was patented in England and its exportation was illegal.

The Cylinder machine patented by John Gilpin of Philadelphia, was the first American invention. It was evidently based on a wire-covered cylinder machine, invented by John Dickenson in England in 1809.

As the demand for paper steadily increased, a serious shortage of suitable rags deveolped. Thrifty New England housewives had relatively few rags, for adult clothes were redesigned or cut down for children and left-over pieces were usually incorporated into rag rugs and quilts. Advertisements urging housewives to save rages apperared in newspapers to no avail. One company even included "save rags" into its watermark. So desperate was the need that rags were imported by the boatload from Europe and the Near East.

In addition, waste paper was used in the production of cheaper grades of paper. Foreign papers, brought into the country as ballast, were cheaply bought.

Experiments using every imaginable substance were carried out to find a readily available raw material from which to make inexpensive paper. It was not until 1863, that a method for creating paper from wood pulp was patented, revolutionizing the industry.

Community theatre grows in Newton

By Frank DeBenedetto
Correspondent

NEWTON - Almost a year ago, Larry Lane's goal was to set up a new repertory theatre group, all that was needed was a place to grow; that place was the Newton Arts Center.

Now, Lane is the director of the New Repertory Project, a theatre group based at the Newton Arts Center and Lane's new goal is to bring good community theatre to the Garden City.

"Historically, all good theatre companies come out of communities," said Lane. "The Group Theatre in New York, The Actors Workshop in Seminole, even the Globe Theatre in Shakespeare's time.

"We'd like to bring high quality theatre to Newton, and I think at the Arts Center we can do that," he said.

Lane approached Newton Arts Center Director Jo Simon with the idea of a new theatre group about nine months ago. According to Lane, he needed a space, and what he needed fit in well with what the Center had to offer. Together with his wife, Kathryn Lubar, and friend Donna Glick, Lane founded the New Repertory Project.

"To find a place to perform is both difficult and expensive," said Lane. "Jo Simon seemed very interested in our ideas."

In June, the group was ready for their first production.

"We had no notion at all of how theatre would go over," said Lane, who holds a Ph.D. in dramatic criticism and directing from Stanford University.

The ensemble performed three one-act plays about desperate love, and the result was a success as far as Lane was concerned.

"We covered our costs, we played to respectable audiences and later full houses, and we got good reviews," Lane said.

Lane, who has also been successful as the director of the M.I.T. Shakespeare Ensemble, is now teaching courses at the Arts Center along with Glick. In October, the group will put on its first full-scale production, "The Mound Builders," by Lanford Wilson. According to Lane, the objectives of the New Repertory Project involve the people of Newton.

'All good theatre companies come out of communities.'

Larry Lane, director
New Repertory Project

"Our long-term prospects are to build a successful theatre ensemble and to build relationships. The relationship between the actor and the audience is the key. Theatre should serve a community and reflect its ideas," said Lane.

The three core founders, Lane, Lubar and Glick have made a two-year committment at the Arts Center and agree that with the help of Newton they can make the project go.

"We invite the community to get involved. Most of the players are from the area and they have also committed themselves to make it work," Lane said.

The idea of an ensemble plays an important role in successful community theatre, according to Lane.

"Really good theatre comes when people have worked together for a while. It's like a jazz quartet, people work together to develop a common style," he said.

"We've come a tremendously far distance in about one year. It's a long slow process to put out a production, and its the same way when you try to build a successful theatre group."

Lane attributes some of the success of the project to the Arts Center itself, and director, Jo Simon.

"Jo runs a very sophisticated arts center. It's very high quality and has a high calibre faculty. She also has support for what it takes to make good art," he said.

Lane sees the other theatre groups in town not as competition, but as serving the community interest.

"Wherever there's an interest in theatre, then there will be theatres. It's just like Macy's and Gimbel's being on the same block. People will want as much theatre as possible. There's no competitive relationship."

'The Mound Builders' to be performed beginning Oct. 25

The New Repertory Project, theatre-in-residence at the Newton Arts Center, announces its fall production, "The Mound Builders" by Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright Lanford Wilson. Performances will be held at the Arts Center, 61 Washington Park, Newtonville, Oct. 25 to Nov. 11, Thursday through Sunday nights at 8 p.m.

"The Mound Builders," first produced in 1975, is probably Wilson's richest and most unusual play. Set on an archaeological expedition in southern Illinois, the drama depicts the fates of two archaeologists, their families and a strange young man from the town who brings about their destruction.

In its review of the original production, the New York Times said, "It is an epic in the guise of a family drama ... Mr. Wilson ... leads us on an exploration that is thought-provoking and endlessly fascinating." The London Times proclaimed, "It is one of the most interesting American plays in years, and the writing is absolutely masterly."

"The Mound Builders" is the second production of the New Repertory Project. The first production, "Desperate Love," played at the Arts Center in June. Founded in October, 1983, by four Boston-based theatre professionals, the project is under the direction of Larry Lane, previously director of the M.I.T. Shakespeare Ensemble.

Tickets are available by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to: Newton Arts Center, 61 Washington Park, Newton, MA 02160. For more information, call 964-3424.

Tiger booters deadlocked for 1st

NEWTON — When Brockton comes to town, the Newton North boys' soccer team usually figures on a tough time, but that wasn't the case on Friday as the Tigers handled the Boxers fairly well in a 3-0 victory.

The win doesn't do anything for the logjam at the top of the Suburban League, although Brockton drops out of first with a 4-2 record. Newton, Waltham (winners over North Quincy Friday) and Cambridge Rindge and Latin are all tied for first with nine points, with the Boxers just one behind. The Tigers boast a 4-1-1 mark.

Newton used a very strong first half to take care of Brockton. The strategy of choice against the Boxers is to score early, and the Tigers did just that, tallying in the first three minutes of the game.

Junior Peter Bourland got what proved to be the gamewinner, nailing a shot from 25 yards out. Stopper Andy Shaver started the play with an interception. He fed Bourland, who quickly turned and put it over the surprised Brockton netminder.

Not satisfied with one score, the Tigers kept the pressure on and it resulted in an insurance goal at 8:40. On the fifth Newton corner kick of the half, co-captain Artie Aaron bounced one off the post that hit the Boxer keeper, then went off a fullback and in.

The second half was much more even, as Brockton got some good scoring chances. Newton coach Roger Brown took advantage of the lead to give his bench some work against a relatively good team.

Whenever the Boxers got anything going offensively, keeper Gary Scott was there to stonewall it. He made some outstanding saves in the second half. It was Scott's second shutout, as he has given up one goal in 3½ games.

Don Natale ended the scoring at 12:45 of the second half. Right halfback Brian Scales made a nice play at midfield to feed right wing Eli Berg. Berg loft out a cross that went over Bourland's head, but Natale alertly came in from the left wing and headed it into the open side. Natale was helped by the fact that two Brockton defenders and the goalkeeper had all made Bourland their primary concern.

The Tigers also got an outstanding effort from senior sweeper Jim Donovan, who frustrated the Boxers time after time by breaking up their offensive thrusts. He was a big factor in the transition game, turning the ball around in a hurry on numerous occasions.

It was only Donovan's third game back there, as he had been a forward earlier in the season.

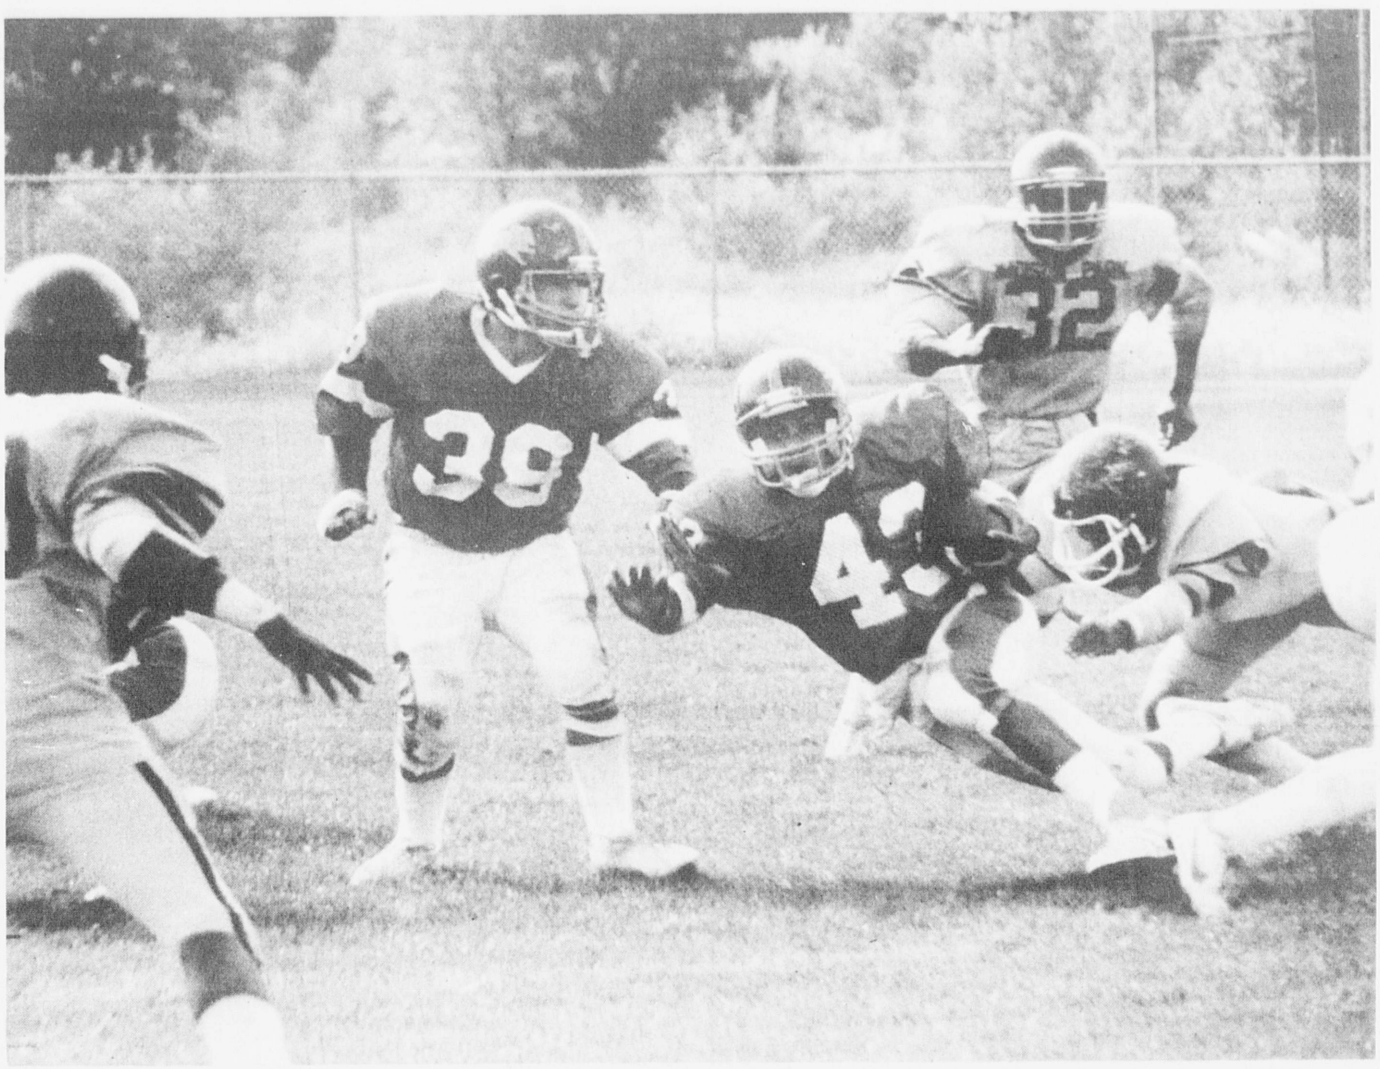

"We've played well the last three games and he's one of the reasons," said Brown.

Rollins paces 3rd South win

By Mike Stoller
Sports Correspondent

NEWTON — Everything fell into place for the third consecutive week. The Newton South football team was outstanding on offense and did what it wanted to do on defense: hold its opponents to mere "goose eggs" on the scoreboard.

The bottom line is that the Lions bested the Madison Park High School Cardinals in a 32-0 rout on Saturday afternoon at Newton South.

Lion running back Kevin Rollins led the charge once again, gaining 120 yards including three touchdowns. He now has nine TDs on the young season.

Rollins showed his great strength and ability throughout the game but it was midway through the third quarter when it seemed that not even a steel wall could have stopped the powerful tailback. From the Madison 17 he promptly ran to the five before pushing and muscling his way into the end zone and taking a few tacklers with him. That finished the drive that covered 66 yards and put South on top, 26-0.

But Newton for all intents and purposes had this contest won in the first half when it surged to an 18-0 lead.

On the opening drive of the game the Lions marched 68 yards for a touchdown, getting several efficient ground gains from Rollins and teammate Darvell Huffman. Rollins plowed into the end zone from three yards out to put South ahead, 6-0. The conversion failed.

Although the Lions primarily went with their dominant running game (they have done so since the season started) quarterback Steve Altman made good of his few opportunities to throw the ball. From the Newton 28, the Lions signal caller hooked up with wide receiver Kevin Houlihan for a 72-yard touchdown pass on the first South play of the second quarter. Houlihan caught the well-thrown ball at the Madison 40 before outracing the defense down the right sideline. The conversion failed again but South had a comfortable 12-0 lead.

Later in the period Huffman checked in with South's third touchdown on a two-yard plunge that made the score 18-0. The Lion defense, however, played a key role in holding Madison before Huffman capped the 27-yard drive.

On a third-and-ten situation from the Cardinal 24, South applied strong pressure on quarterback Simba Sharif, who scrambled to the right desperately looking for an open receiver before being sacked by Lion Tom Rogers for an 18-yard loss.

Madison got the 18 yards back on the ensuing play as Sharif hit Robert Buoyer in stride. Nevertheless the visitors faced a fourth and long situation.

Perhaps the Cardinals would have gained more if they ran or passed because their punt went but three yards to their own 27. Rollins and Huffman did the rest on offense.

Sharif teamed up with flanker Jeff Williams for a 25-yard pass that put the Cardinals across midfield late in the second period but Lion Derryck Harrell made a heads up play, picking off a pass two plays later to foil the drive. The Lions led, 18-0, at the half.

Altman went to work again in the third quarter. He connected with Rollins for 18 and 16-yard gains respectively before the latter steamrolled his way over the goal line on a 17-yard run. Harrell's conversion attempt was successful and the Lions went 26-0.

Early in the fourth quarter Rollins completed the scoring on a 10-yard touchdown scamper that capped a 44-yard drive. The only problem South had all afternoon was making the conversion. Another try had failed but South had won easily 32-0 and boosted its record to 3-0. The Lions have outscored their opponents 86-20 in three weeks of play.

Lion coach Art Kojoyian said his team "did play better both ways" (offensively and defensively) than the past two weeks. He pointed to such players as Jim Yerardi and Huffman as having solid defensive games. Kojoyian, however, explains that next week's opponent, Boston Latin, will be a much tougher challenge.

"Boston Latin is not the competition that this club (Madison) is," said Kojoyian. "We have to do what we do better."

And so the Lions will go for their fourth victory when they play host to Boston Latin in their first Dual County League game of the season Friday afternoon at 2:30 p.m.

Midget A's down Waltham

BURLINGTON — The Newton A's recorded another shutout to remain unbeaten and unscored upon, downing Waltham, 4-0, at the Burlington Ice Pallace in Middlesex Midget League play on Saturday.

Neil Ronchinsky made 12 saves for the winners, who opened scoring at the 2:58 mark of the first period.

Don Vito scored after Bob Sullivan carried the puck down the ice and around the net to set it up. Newton scored again at 10:13 of the opening period as Bill MacDougall jammed home the rebound of an Anthony Whiting shot from the point.

Forty five seconds later Tim Burke scored on a pretty pass from Chris Pike for a 3-0 lead. Newton pressed in the second period, but couldn't put it past a determined Waltham netminder.

The final goal came at 7:44 of the third period. Rob Ingham put in a rebound of a Jim Rizza shot from right wing to cap the scoring.

Newton North girls now 6-0 in soccer

BROCKTON — The Newton North girls' soccer team continues to roll, earning a 3-0 win in Brockton on Friday to up its record to 6-0.

Kristen Hughes broke the ice eight minutes into the game on a pass from Carolyn Natale. Natale crossed the ball from the wing to Hughes, who knocked it into the upper corner.

Although Fuzzy Howland's squad only led 1-0 at the half, his team had outshot the Boxers, 25 to none. "We just couldn't put it in," concluded the coach.

Fifteen minutes into the second half, Jackie Kinsella got an insurance goal. Tina Rosenthal got the ball to Kinsella, who launched a beautiful shot into the uper corner over the goalie, from the 18-yard line.

Three minutes later Hughes passed to Rosenthal, who took the ball in from the wing, who pushed it in and scored.

Laura Yellen earned an easy shutout, as the Tigers outshot Brockton, 38-2. She was helped by Rebecca Locke, who had an outstanding day at fullback. "She was the best player of the day," praised Howland.

South 1-0 victor

Katrina Antonellis knocked in a corner kick 34 minutes into the first half to lead the Newton South Lions over Acton-Boxboro, 1-0, in a Dual County League girls' soccer match on Wednesday.

Coach Charles Hurwitz praised the play of goalie Dede Theodore who came out to cut down three breakaways. Although the Colonials notched only five shots on net, there were several other scoring threats headed of by Theodore's aggressive play.

The chances weren't exactly abundant for either team. The Lions had five or six solid opportunities, but were stopped on all but one, as the Colonials got a good game from their netminder. Newton also put several shots off the crossbar.

The only one that went in, though, was Antonellis' shot off the corner kick from Colleen Walsh. Antonellis took the rebound and put in home into the lower right corner.

In addition to Antonellis, Hurwitz praised Erica Kushner for her efforts at sweeper. Julie Goldenberg and Linda Rottenberg played well off the bench.

"Everyone had a better than average game," said the coach. "We dominated possession of the ball."

The Lions wound up with 17 shots.

Lions triumph in volleyball

NEWTON — Judy Kennedy shuffled her lineup after a 13-15 loss in the first game, and her moves proved profitable as the Newton South Lions rallied to beat North Quincy, 2-1, in a volleyball match on Friday.

After losing the first game, Kennedy moved Karen Blackman to blocker, and she played a fine game to lead the team to consecutive 15-10 wins and the victory. Other stars for the winners included Priscilla Upshaw and Lana Kim.

Lancers prevail

The Newton Catholic volleyball team earned a win over Sacred Heart on Thursday, but it was a solemn victory, as the team, wearing black armbands, dedicated the game to Andrea Fremault's father, who died suddenly Wednesday.

The Lancers ran their record to 5-0 with 15-7, 15-5 wins.

Kerry MacDougall and Joanne Abruzzi served well for Newton Catholic, while Cheryl Chagnon came through with some solid passing. Captain Shari Calabro and Angela Bove also provided great setting and hitting.

North prevails

Arlington played a strong third game to take a see-saw volleyball win over Newton North on Monday, 15-11, 4-15, 15-4.

Wendy Rogers had a standout afternoon for the Tigers, both setting and serving. She served six consecutive points in the first game.

Leading the way in the second game were Linda Schnall, Dana Steinberg and Nancy Sullivan, who all served well. Beth Morahan did a good job at the net.

South loses in field hockey

WESTON — K.C. Wilder's hat trick led the undefeated Wildcats over Newton South, 7-0, in a Dual County League field hockey contest Wednesday.

Weston, which now sports a 5-0 mark, began the scoring five minutes into the game. Wilder knocked in a cross from Betsy Vining for the eventual winner.

Ann Moellering scored from Alyce Santos for the second goal, and Lisa Stichweh notched the third with the assist going to Liza Danforth. Chance Fechtor banged in the final goal of the first half on a pass from Laura Peresky.

The second half belonged pretty much to Wilder, the senior forward chalked up another pair of goals, one assisted by Vining, the other unassisted on a breakaway.

Joci Jones capped the scoring on a pass from Stichweh. Goalie Paula Sullivan earned the shutout without much work, as her fullbacks really shut down the Lion offense.

Marie Butera's squad faces Acton-Boxboro next Tuesday in its next contest.

Raiders roll

In a Middlesex League game on Tuesday, Cheryl Maloney posted her fourth shutout of the season as Watertown High raised its record to 4-1-1 with a 2-0 victory over Stoneham.

Maloney stopped seven shots in the victory, as Watertown got goals from Karen McNeil and Allison Horne.

The Red Raiders opened the scoring three minutes into the game as the Spartans misplayed the ball and McNeil, a junior wing, seized the opportunity to take off on a breakaway.

The game stayed close until finally, with only three minutes left, Horne gave her team some breathing room after taking a pass from Mariellen Real.

The Raiders also got good efforts from junior halfback Kim Iodice and senior sweeper Donna McInnis.

Watertown is back in action today at home against Wakefield.

Newton North romps to initial grid victory

By Roy LeBlanc
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The Tigers found out last week that they weren't the best football team in the Suburban League. After Saturday, Newton North now knows it isn't the worst, either, thanks to a decisive 24-0 victory over Cambridge Rindge and Latin at Dickinson Stadium.

"We needed this one for our self-respect," said Coach Peter Capodilupo.

The coach said going into the contest that he wanted to simplify the offense, and that's exactly what he did. The players responded with 251 yards on the ground and another 105 through the air. Mark Adams and Geoff Drew combined for 143 yards rushing, while quarterback Rusty Halloran threw for a pair of TDs in completing seven of his 14 passing attempts. Drew and Howie Haywood ran for the two remaining scores.

Capodilupo called Drew's return from a shoulder injury "a positive thing. He set a tone for the younger backs."

The coach was also delighted with Halloran's performance: "It was best game at Newton North." Capodilupo went on to especially praise Halloran's mental game even more than his physical one, citing two quarterback sneaks he called on his own and a smart decision on a bad snap on a punt, as the senior threw the ball away from his own end zone.

The Cantabs, on the other hand, showed why they haven't won this year and were 0-10 last season. They were unable to put anything together with any consistency and contributed four turnovers to the Newton cause. Alex DeNucci accounted for two of those with a pair of interceptions on consecutive Cambridge possessions. The first led to a score.

The Tigers got things rolling by scoring twice in the second quarter and then finished the Cantabs off with one score apiece in the third and fourth.

The score that really buried Cambridge came with 1:50 left in the third period. When Halloran hit Rich Claflin for a 13-yard TD, it made the score 18-0, with the Cantabs not having enough time to do anything about it.

The 11 plays covered 85 yards, as the Tigers were able to march the ball steadily all day, as the 19 first downs would indicate. (Cambridge could muster only six.) Drew and Adams did the heavy work, combining to rush the ball six times on the drive. Drew had one carry of 19 yards and Adams one of 17.

Aided by a 15-yard Cantab penalty, the Tigers looked in great shape with a first-and-10 at the Cambridge 21. Drew gained eight yards on the next play, but then the drive stalled, as two straight rushes went nowhere. On fourth-and-two, Halloran rolled right and looped a pass to Claflin who was standing unattended at the back of the end zone for the score.

The second quarter was Newton's biggest of the day, as the Tigers hammered in two scores, both on mini-drives, aided by the defense.

The first came a little later than it might have, as after a 12-play drive, Otto Mariano fumbled the ball away on the Cambridge three. The defense stood fast, though, and after a punt and an excellent return by Drew, the Tigers had a first-and-10 at the Cantab 14.

From there it took only three plays to push it across. Again Drew and Adams took turns doing the work, with Drew breaking through the left side from the five with 8:33 to go in the second period.

DeNucci's first interception set up the second tally of the afternoon. He picked off Jamie Holway's toss at the Cambridge 48 and hustled it back to the 28. Again it only took three plays to put it in, with Halloran finishing the drive by hitting Colin Ryan from the 17. Drew's nine-yard run put the Tigers on the 17. On the next play, Halloran went back on a play-action, took a couple of steps to the right, and found Ryan wide open.

Newton tried to fake the kick and go for two on each of the first two TDs. The attempts failed both times. In the second half, Capodilupo dispensed with the fancy stuff and tried to boot the points, but met with no more success, hence the 24-0 final.

Yet another Newton interception led to the final score of the day. This time Ray Rowland did the honors, nabbing Holway's toss at the Cambridge 30 and getting it back to the 27. The Tigers wisely chewed up some time before putting it across the line, taking seven plays. By the time the Cantabs got it back, only 1:38 remained in the game.

Howie Haywood was the man on this final drive, carrying four times, including the one that got the ball across the goal line. Included was a big eight-yard gain on third down that gave the Tigers a first at the four. Two plays later the senior went through the middle of the pile and in from the one.

Cambridge didn't get much of a scoring threat going all afternoon, as the Tiger defense held solid whenever it had to. When it was still 6-0, the Cantabs got one golden opportunity when a snap on a punt attempt sailed over Halloran's head. The end result gave Cambridge a first down on the Newton 19. Four plays later, the Cantabs turned it over on downs at the 23.

Until their final possession, the best the Cantabs could do after that was get to the Newton 37 (thanks to a Tiger penalty). DeNucci's second interception ended that drive.

Trying to at least erase the embarrassment of a shutout, the Cantabs got down to the Newton 22 on their final possession.

It couldn't be called a drive, as such, for it was only one pass play from Holway to Lance Dottin that covered 38 yards, almost half of the Cantab total on the afternoon. Dottin's fine catch was wasted on the next play when Holway fumbled the ball away, giving it back to Newton on the 23. Four plays later, the game was over.

Capodilupo had words of praise for the linemen after the game, both offensively and defensively. The offensive group of Greg Larson, Steve DelGrosso, Claflin, Bob MacNevin, Jim Staley, Jim Fanning, Don Haleyi and Steve Anthony were cited, along with defensive players John Morrissey, Scott Lanciloti and Scott Hamblett.

The coach also thought linebackers Chuck Sakakini and John Flynn "had their best game of the year.

"The line gave our skilled people a chance to operate," said Capodilupo. "It forced them out of their running game. Offensively we got our rythm going for the first time this season."

The Tigers travel to North Quincy next Sunday for a 1:30 p.m. contest. The home team is also 1-2, having been belted by Brockton on Saturday.

Newton South swims to victory over Quincy

QUINCY — The Newton South girls' swimming team bounced back from a tough opening loss to Bedford with a 121-43 romp over Quincy on Friday. The Lions got to see a lot of swimmers in action in the one-sided meet.

Newton took first in every single event, showing the team's depth in the process as no individual repeated as a winner.

There were some double-winners if the relays are included. Sarah olper was a member of the 200 medley relay team and also took the 200 individual medley in 2:54.1.

Amy Freedman joined Stolper on that relay and grabbed first in the 500 freestyle at 6:30.4.

Finally, Sarah Lahey was part of the winning 400 freestyle relay quartet and earned an individual first in the 50 freestyle at 31.6.

Although the opening meet resulted in an 89-83 loss to Bedford, as the meet came down to the final relay, the team of Freedman, Wendy Meltzer, Liz Morrison and Angelica Brisk did set a school record in the medley relay at 2:08.4.

Judy Blinstrub Babson College coach

Judy Blinstrub, a Newton native, is the new new head coach of women's soccer and basketball at Babson College. She replaces Terry Febrey who moved to Stonybrook College in New York to take a similar position.

Blinstrub comes to Babson after spending tenures at Mount Alvernia School in Newton and Brimmer & May in Chestnut Hill where she coached basketball, softball, volleyball, field hockey and lacrosse. Blinstrub, 28, is a graduate of Bridgewater State College where she led the women hoopsters to two consectutive state championships as a player.

She remains active as a player-coach in Newton's twilight softball and basketball leagues. Her two teams have won league titles 11 times in the the last eight years.

North freshmen belt Cantabs, 28-6

CAMBRIDGE — Newton North's freshman football team got touchdowns from four different people to wipe out Cambridge Rindge and Latin on Friday, 28-6. The Tigers built a 28-0 bulge before the Cantabs spoiled the shutout with a meaningless score late in the game.

Two first-quarter TDs decided this game for all intents and purposes. Dave Mulvey capped a 50-yard drive with a five-yard run to make it 6-0. Although the conversion failed, the Tigers came right back again, sparked by a Dan McAuliffe fumble recovery at the 50.

From midfield, Newton marched in, with Al Clark going over from 10 yards out to make it 12-0.

Before the half was over, the Tigers had made it 20-0, thanks to a great run by Milton Britton. From the 45 yardline, Britton swept around left end and took off for paydirt, behind a great block by tackle Dan Cedrone.

This time, the Tigers converted on a pass from Joe Proia to Josh Fields.

Newton North wrapped it up in the third quarter on a 10-yard run by Mark DiStefano, who also ran for the two-point conversion.

That capped an 80-yard drive which was kept alive by a beautiful 60-yard pass reception by Dennis Rutan. That got the ball up to the Cambridge 40.

Defensively, linemen Cedrone and Jim and Mike Breshire all played well.

The 2-0 Tigers host North Quincy on Thursday.

Tiger linksmen notch shutout over Waltham

NEWTON — Tiger golf coach Jerry Phillips was worried when he found out that his top golfer, Jim Campbell, was going to miss Newton North's match with Waltham Tuesday at Brae Burn.

When play was over, his team had chalked up a 9-0 victory over the Hawks, as Dan Nardone and Rickey DeSimone both fired 38s, and a host of others finished with scores in the 39-41 range.

"Our depth really has been a key," said Phillips, who saw two golfers, Greg Toomey and Phillip Jepson, both score under 42 to be in the top nine in their first varsity match.

Kevin Toomey, the number three man, scored a 39, while Jim Weaver notched a 40.

"We're about 10 deep now, and Newton has always been a pretty good community for golf. I get about 25 to 30 kids out for the team in the fall," said Phillips.

"Campbell is in a class by himself, but on certain days, our ninth man is strong enough to beat our second man. There are always kids scratching away in the wings. It's a pleasant problem trying to get them all in the matches."

After losing their first two matches, the Tigers boast a record of 2-3. Phillips is already looking forward to next Thursday's home match against Brockton at Brae Burn. "We have to get past Brookline on Monday first, but I'm looking to avenge the beating (9-0) that Brockton handed to us earlier."

As for Waltham, coach Joe Connelly now owns a 3-2 mark after wins over Cambridge, Quincy and Malden and losses to Brookline and the Tigers.

Connelly fields a team that has some strong underclassmen that should make Waltham strong in the future.

Captain Jim DeMoy is the Hawks number one player, and is "a real good influence on the younger kids," according to his coach. Junior Matt Little, a basketball player in the winter, is another strong golfer for Waltham. He usually plays two or three in the matches. The younger golfers that have Connelly confident include four sophomores and a freshman.

"They're all quality kids, and in a year or two they'll really be something," predicts the coach.

Chris Buckley, Bill Chaisson, Robert McCue and Mark DePass are the four sophoores, while Connelly predicts that freshman Brian Black could be the team's number one player before the year is out. Rounding out the squad is senior Eric Cormier.

Lion harriers avert shutout

In a cross-country meet Tuesday at Newton South, Mike Silverstein finished with a time of 16:14 to place seventh and avoid a shutout in the Lions' meet with Lincoln-Sudbury.

Newton South ended up suffering a 15-49 loss to the Warriors, and Silverstein's time, which was 33 seconds better than last week's clocking, was just about the only bright spot. The only other Lion to place in the top 10 was Mike Perskey, who finished in 17:03.

"Everyone on the team improved their time," said coach Paul McCarthy, "but Lincoln-Sudbury is a very strong, deep team. I'm encouraged by the improvement though."

Police log

Parole violation

NEWTON – A Newton man found guilty two months ago of indecently assaulting three children was found to be in violation of the terms of his parole after a hearing in Newton District Court.

Harrison Ricles, 23, of 495 Parker St., was convicted July 20 on three counts of indecent assault and battery and placed on 18-month probation.

He was found guilty last week of simple assault and battery in connection with an Aug. 22 incident — a finding that put him in violation of the terms of his probation.

Judge Monte G. Basbas continued the case to Oct. 11 for final disposition.

Ricles was accused of jumping from behind a Parker Street bush and assaulting a next door neighbor who was riding by on his bicycle.

Youth injured in jump from train

NEWTON HIGHLANDS -- A 16-year-old Newton youth was injured last Monday when he jumped from the rear of an MBTA train while reportedly hitching a ride with a friend.

The youth, a Randolph Street resident, was in good condition at Newton-Wellesley Hospital, where he was taken following the 4:15 p.m. accident.

Police said he jumped from the train as it approached the Newton Highlands MBTA Station at a speed estimated to be between 40 to 50 m.p.h.

A friend accompanying the injured youth called for an ambulance. Police said the two jumped the train and were hitching a ride at the time of the accident.

Thief removes window

NEWTON CENTRE -- Two burglaries were reported last Wednesday, records show.

A porch window at a Prince Street home was removed sometime in the afternoon and $200 in cash stolen, police said.

The money was left on a kitchen counter as payment for the services of a housekeeper, who arrived at about 4:30 p.m. to discover the theft. The rear door of a Beacon Street store was found forced open shortly before midnight by a patrolling officer, police said.

No one was inside the building and the owner was notified. Police are unsure if anything was stolen from the premises.

AMC stolen from home

NONANTUM — A 1970 AMC Javelin was reported stolen last Tuesday from in front of a Green Street home, police said.

The theft occurred within the space of 25 minutes and was reported at 10:10 p.m., police said.

Man charged with destroying property

NEWTON — A 19-year-old West Newton man was arraigned in Newton District Court for malicious destruction of city property and driving a motor vehicle on public grounds.

James A. Bowe, of 20 Noble St., pleaded innocent to both charges and is due back in court Oct. 9.

He was summoned to court in connection with an Aug. 18 incident.

Car stolen from Woodland Station

WABAN — A car stolen from the Woodland MBTA Station last Wednesday was found abandoned on Mary Mount Road minutes later with the keys still in the ignition, police said.

The theft occurred at about 4:30 p.m., when a rider disembarking from a subway train saw his car being driven out the lot, police said.

He called police, who searched the area and found the motor vehicle still running, but abandoned, at the head of Mary Mount Road -- only a few blocks away.

Stolen was a $400 AM/FM stereo and equalizer, police said.

Luggage stolen from corner

NEWTON UPPER FALLS -- About $675 worth of luggage and personal items was stolen from a man who left them at the corner of Columbia and Needham streets and went inside a nearby restaurant Sunday night.

Police said the victim dropped a $175 bag of golf clubs and an overnight bag containing $500 worth of clothing unattended for five minutes while he spoke with a friend inside the eatery. When he returned, the luggage was gone, police said.

Apprehended after high-speed chase

NEWTON — Police apprehended a Waltham man after a high-speed chase into Watertown early Saturday that resulted in the arrest of William Tennant, 29, of 23 Wellington St. on six charges, including driving under the influence of alcohol, according to station records.

That night in Newton, a 17-year-old Albemarle Road girl was thrown from the hood of the 1980 Chevrolet Chevette she was sitting about 10:30 p.m., when a car driven by a speeding 18-year-old youth slammed into the Chevette after apparently engaging in high-speed antics with another vehicle, police report.

Phillip Bemis, 18, of 340 Linwood Ave., Newton, was cited for speeding and operating to endanger after the brown, Mercury sedan he was driving struck the parked car, police said. The driver told police that he lost control after, "playing games," with another car at speeds of up to 50 m.p.h., according to a police spokesperson.

Early Saturday morning, shortly before 2 a.m., a radar cruiser clocked the car driven by Tennant at speeds in excess of 50 m.p.h. on California St., near the Newton-Watertown border, according to police. Giving chase with blue-lights flashing at Chapel Street, the cruiser followed Tennant to Bridge Street and on into Watertown at speeds between 40-50 m.p.h., according to police. The suspect, and two passengers, were stopped at Pine Street in Watertown, police said.

A check revealed Tennant was driving on a suspended license, said police, and that an odor of alcohol was detected on his breath. Held to be unlawfully driving, and under the influence, the suspect was also charged with operating to endanger, failing to stop for a police vehicle, failing to obey traffic signals and speeding, police said.

New commander

NEWTON CENTRE – The Newton Centre Photo-Quick, 101 Union St., reported assorted equipment worth at least $9,400 was taken from the business sometime before 8 a.m. Saturday, according to police.

No signs of forced entry, said police. A complete inventory will be made of the missing items, according to a spokesperson.

Chief Quinn suggests bus safety for children

NEWTON — Police Chief William F. Quinn cautions that bus-riding children now must accept additional responsibility for their safety both while awaiting the bus and then on the ride itself.

In an effort to help parents establish guidelines governing bus stop behavior and safe riding habits, Chief Quinn makes the following basic suggestions:

• Each family should decide on what route it will take going to and from the bus stop and proper pedestrian rules should be encouraged at all times. Each rider should always leave home allowing enough time to arrive at the stop without hurrying.

• The child should clearly be told what to do "just in case" (s)he has missed the bus. For example, should the child return home, go to a neighbor's home or go directly to school. Planning ahead for such a possiblity will make any child feel more secure if it should occur.

• Clarify what should be done if the bus is late. In preparation for such a situation, Chief Quinn urges all parents at a given stop to get together and be in agreement. It would be least desirable for each child to react independently, i.e., some returning home while others continue to wait at the stop, or still others catch rides with a friend's parents.

• Waiting at a bus stop can be a fun time for children -- a time when they can socialize with their friends, old and new. This, however, can easily get out of hand. All bus riders should contiually be reminded to wait quietly on the sidewalk (not on the road or on someone's property without permission).

• Inclusive with safe bus procedures goes the responsiblity of knowing on-bus behavior. Smaller children should be allowed to get on the bus first and all should be encouraged to find a vacant seat immediately with no attempt to change during the ride.

Chief Quinn said children should know that the same rules apply to buses as those for the family car -- no hands over the seats, no yelling or screaming.

• Exiting the bus should also reflect the same degree of courtesy, with the older children assisting the smaller ones as they step down, reminding them to use the handrail. Children can understand that there is no need to rush.

Once off the bus, children should never cross the street without taking a few seconds to look. All too often an accident has occurred when a child, believing that flashing bus lights stop cars, has run in front of a moving vehicle pulling around a stopped bus.

• Be sure all riders are aware of what to do in case of an emergency. All Newton children do receive training in bus evacuation twice annually, but this can be reinforced at home.

In conclusion, Chief Quinn states, "Busing public elementary school children is a relatively new program in our city. It is a learning process as well as a teaching experience, not only for the children but for the mothers and fathers, the school personnel and the police. By working together as a community we can make this a safe and rewarding experience for all."

Mayor to present first annual volunteer awards

NEWTON — In recognition of the outstanding volunteer service offered to the City of Newton by hundreds of citizens each year, Mayor Theodore Mann has inaugurated the "Mayor's Annual Garden City Volunteer Award" to be given to individuals who have in some special and creative way, devoted their time and expertise to the city for an extended period of time.

The recipients of the first annual volunteer awards are Thelma Fleishman, Ernest G. Angevine, Alice and John Webber, Shirley Bibbo, Paul J. Burke, Stephen Holmes and Sidney Shuman. The official presentation of the awards will be made at Newton's Harvest Fair, Sunday, Oct. 7 at noon.

Fleishman's contributions have been made through the Conservation and Historical commissions, the city archives and the Jackson Homestead. Her major concerns in Newton have been to raise the consciousness of officials and of the public to the conservation isssues regarding the Charles River Watershed, and the use of open spaces, water, land and cultural resources. Single handedly, she lobbied for, and succeeded in getting, the Newton Centre Burial Ground to be added to the National Registry.

Alice and John Webber are lifelong Newton residents who have volunteered on many occasions to help improve the quality of life for other Newton residents. Among their accomplishments are devoted service in the interest of community development, on numerous Parent-Teachers' Associations, the Boys' and Girls' clubs, and the Multi-Service Center Board.

Alice has also served as president of the Nonantum Nursery School and as a member of the Newton Cultural Affairs Commission, and the Newton Arts Center Board. John has worked tirelessly on various projects related to the Newton Free Library. Most recently, the Webbers were successful in their efforts to have the Italian language recognized as an academic course for credit in the Newton Public Schools.

For over 38 years, Paul Burke has been involved in the city through the many youth recreation programs. He was one of the founders and organizers of the Newton West Little League and of the Babe Ruth League, now known as the International League.

Burke served on the Parks and Recreation Commission for over 15 years and was chairman for two terms. For six years he was a member of the Board of Aldermen and for 28 years he served on the board of directors of the Newton Community Service Center.

Currently he is serving on the Billy Hammill Memorial Committee which annually selects the outstanding high school baseball player in the city, co-chairs the Charles Cosgrove Memorial Scholarship and has done so for 23 years.

At a time when members were not paid, Ernest G. Angevine served as a member of the Newton Board of Aldermen, 1946-1953, was chairman and member of of the Newton Retirement Board, 1954 to the present, and member of the Newton Board of License Commissioners since 1969 and was chairman since March, 1975.

In the post World War II era, as chairman of the Board of Aldermen Claims and Rules Committee, he took the lead in the first comprehensive revision of the city zoning ordinances, a revision vital to the future growth of the community in retaining its fundamental residential character. As chairman and member of the Retirement Board, he supervised the investment of funds and led the program to eventually provide for the full funding of the pensions of city employees.

Shirley Bibbo's work with senior citizens through the Newton Community School program for the past five years has been tremendously important in humanizing life in Newton Upper Falls. The Upper Falls seniors meet weekly in the former Emerson School; they make the gym alive with activity. Bibbo has managed to create a sense of neighborhood and belonging where that feeling could easily have been lost.

She created the Sunshine Person position so cards will be sent to group members in the hospital.

Sidney Shuman has served as chairman of the Design Review Committee, for over 10 years, a volunteer project established to coordinate the design process for the construction and renovation of public facilities within the City of Newton. With his personal knowledge and understanding of construction personnel, he has ensured that projects are carefully reviewed according to specific, professional guidelines.

Stephen Holmes, as chairman of the Council on Aging for the past decade, must be credited with greatly expanding the city's services to the senior population, accomplished without adding to the taxpayers' burden. One of the many projects initiated during Holmes' tenure was his encouraging Star Market to sponsor the first shopping bus for seniors to the Newton stores.

Several years ago he also organized the Senior Parking Sticker program and a health maintenance program, in conjunction with the Graduate School of Nursing students at Boston College, a program which has evolved into the health maintenance program in existence today.

Transcript co-sponsors job forum

A new job matching program co-sponsored by the Transcript Newspapers and the Norwood Job Matching Center, Division of Employment Security, will be initiated October 18. The Norwood Job Matching Center, in response to the growing needs of area employers and like needs of area job seekers, together with the West Roxbury and Parkway Transcripts and other Transcript newspapers, will conduct a series of Job Matching Forums.

This program design will provide an informal but business-like atmosphere for applicants and employers to discuss specific job openings and career paths. The sponsors want job shoppers to be at ease, able to ask questions, informed. In this ever shrinking labor supply, participating employers will be given the opportunity to display entry level or trainee positions within their industry to an applicant source not previously afforded this forum.

They hope to attract new entrants to the labor market; women re-entering the labor force and those individuals who have dropped out of the job hunt, and unemployed groups targeted by the Division of Employment Security. Target groups include: Economically disadvantaged, minority groups, permanently separated workers, AFDC recipients, and aid to families with dependent children.

Over the six job match forums scheduled through April, the sponsors hope to attract a diversified group of industries associated with this labor market area. Many opportunities abound that will stir the imagination of even the most sophisticated job seeker. Many others are expected to be attracted to take advanteage of this one stop job shopping spree.

Employers who wish to participate must call the Norwood Job Matching Center, Division of Employment Security, 762-9450, and speak to Joe Calnan or Joe Sylvester, to be scheduled into these events. All Job Match Forums will be conducted at Memorial Hall, in Norwood Town Hall, the third Thursday of each month from 1 until 3 p.m. beginning Thursday, Oct. 18, through April (none in December). The only requirement for the employer will be to have at least three entry level positions available with career opportunities, it is not a requirement that employers or applicants reside here.

The employer group participating will represent five different industries and will be relective of industrial patterns consistent with this area.

Paul McCartney

The world's most successful musician

By Cathy Booth

LONDON (UPI) — He crawls under tables with his 6-year-old son, watches TV with his teenage daughters, barbecues in the backyard and thinks his wife's pea soup is the greatest.

Just your average family man. Ordinary. And at age 42, that's how Paul McCartney wants it.

"Am I happy now? Yeah," he says, actually looking it. "I used to dread that question.

"I used to hate it particularly after the breakup of the Beatles. I would kind of go all cold and empty and say 'Yeah' – Like what kind of business is it of yours? But I just happen to be happy now. It's strange to be able to say it without thinking."

The dark hair has gone slightly gray. There are crinkles around the laughing blue eyes, just a hint of love handles at the midriff. He's shorter than expected — 5-foot-10 — and dresses preppie in khakis, button-down shirt, penny loafers and pastel argyle socks.

He is the world's most successful pop musician: recognized by the Guinness Book of Records, worth $100 million by reasonable estimates and $500 million if one could believe the tabloids.

"I'm like Mr. Rich in the press these days," he says mournfully. "I'm supposed to be worth $500 million. But I'm not. It's a pity because young kids will tend to look at me as just that – Mr. Rich. It's a pity because your reputation walks ahead of you."

He has sold 200 million records. His song "Yesterday," from his Beatles era, is the most recorded in history, with some 2,000 versions.

He is also one of the biggest independent publishing tycoons in the world, holding the copyrights to musicals like "Guys and Dolls," "Annie," "Chorus Line" and "Grease" as well as all the songs of his boyhood hero, Buddy Holly.

Yet he is still very much the cute, irreverent, mop-topped Beatle who stormed the world with John, George and Ringo 22 years ago.

He looks happy – contented — a man who's learned to deal with the accusations that he caused the nasty Beatles breakup in 1970, John Lennon's hurtful comments that he was a boring prig, the snide comments about his brassy American wife Linda, the taunts about his syrupy and often slapdash music.

Leaning on his guitar at Air Studios on London's busy Oxford Street, he flashes that ever-ready charm at will. One minute he's sincere, the next pure P.R. Concerned to put you at ease, then miffed when you pry too closely.

Two decades of Beatlemania haven't dehumanized him, but have taught him to be wary.

Of the other Beatles, John Lennon is dead, cut down by an assassin in December 1980. George Harrison has gone into movie production, Ringo into acting. McCartney just goes on writing music, talking even of another concert tour and seemingly oblivious to his near-middle age.

His latest challenge is the movies. He wrote, produced and stars in "Give My Regards to Broad Street", a $10 million movie currently scheduled to premiere Nov. 30. The idea was to show a McCartney trapped between his daydreams and the demanding schedule of a superstar — and how he's kept his sanity.

In real life, the answer is easy: his family.

He and Linda Eastman, daughter of New York music lawyer Lee Eastman, have been married 15 years. On his wedding finger, he wears a band of gold with a tiny jade heart. They have four children, aged 6 to 21. The eldest, Heather, is Linda's daughter by her first marriage and was adopted by McCartney.

Home is in the bucolic Sussex countryside on a 150-acre farm called "Waterford" where pheasants, geese and peacocks roam wild. The barnyard is filled with chicken and ducks, horses and sheep. Paul designed the house, built the chicken coops and allows only his closest friends to visit.

There are no gold records on the walls, he says, no proud display of the MBE (member of the British Empire) medal conferred by the Queen, no huge recording studio. He keeps only an Oscar statuette given to him by John Wayne, a baby Steinway grand piano and his favorite Martin guitar or two.

There are no wild parties, either.

TV is big at the McCartneys'. Paul is hooked on "Fame" along with his teenage daughters, Mary, 14, and Stella, who's coming up to 13. "Dallas" is a favorite with Linda. Paul says he adores "junky" game shows like "The Price is Right" and "The $20,000 Pyramid".

He also claims to be "pretty hot" on their home video game of Asteroids, but is just as content diving under tables hunting up yellow sponge balls for his 6-year-old son James, on whom he positively dotes.

'I'm supposed to be worth $500 million. But I'm not.'

Paul McCartney

They are all vegetarians. McCartney talks lovingly of his wife's thick sandwiches, her macaroni dinners, her baconless quiches. "Sort of cranky," he says in embarrassment — cranky meaning eccentric, not grumpy.

He's still a Liverpudlian at heart, however, admitting to the occasional yearning for egg and chips, sausages and mash (as long as the sausages are vegetarian). He still drinks Scotch and Coke, too, a favorite combination from Beatles days — and he keeps getting busted for pot.

"Silly," he admits.

The friendly facade cracks under curiosity about his private life.

He deeply resents his Howard Hughes image of fabulous wealth and isolation, even if the isolation is real and designed to protect his children.

Asked about his chauffeur-driven blue Mercedes, he snaps, "It's a Mercedes kind of thing. It's not ostentatious. What do you want me to have, a heap?"

On the specifics of his wealth, he has a sharp rejoinder from his Liverpool days: "Look, my dad didn't even tell my mother how much he earned; that's who I'm from, so I'm certainly not going to tell you." James Paul McCartney was born on June 18, 1942, to working-class Liverpool Irish parents. His father was a cotton salesman and ex-jazz trumpetist. His mother may have had a better idea of the family's financial situation than Paul thinks — she always worked as a midwife.

McCartney's first guitar was an oddity, a cello guitar. It was the size of a cello but with a smooth guitar waist. He seemed to be a slow learner until he discovered he was left-handed when it came to guitar-playing.

He made his stage debut at a holiday camp in Wales, singing Little Richard's "Long Tall Sally." He thinks he was 11, or maybe 14.

Little Richard was one idol. Elvis Presley, guitarist Carl Perkins and anybody on the Motown label are also up there. The Beatles name was a sideways tribute to Buddy Holly and the Crickets. Starting in 1960 in the dives of Hamburg, the Beatles graduated to the squalor of Liverpool's underground Cavern Club. By 1963, they had met the queen and become millionaires. No less than 10,000 screaming American fans welcomed them to Kennedy Airport in 1964 for the famous Ed Sullivan TV appearance. They were watched by a record 75 million.

Six years later, by 1970, the magic was gone. The dream collaboration of Lennon and McCartney was over, disrupted in bitterness over their management.

Ironically, Lennon ended up being celebrated for rejecting his MBE, for his crazy bedins, for his pushy Japanese wife Yoko Ono. McCartney became the heavy for breaking up the Beatles in the courts, for his repeated pot arrests and for his pushy American wife.

The wistful smile of Paul McCartney which has thrilled females for two decades.

"John and I weren't black and white, although people took John for all his aggression to be the good guy because he showed his warts. It makes them sympathetic," Paul once said in dismay. "I'd always thought, in order to be liked, you had to be unwarty."

It is still the philosophy of his life, being unwarty.

He hates being misunderstood. He is a worried everybody will think him "cranky" for being an ecologist and an animal lover, hence a vegetarian.

He has determinedly opted for the quiet life in Sussex, 60 miles southeast of London near the town of Rye.

There's a pool, stables, a 65-foot-tall tower with a panoramic view of the countryside. "The area's fabulous. Constable's England — very, very rural. It's beautiful; hills, valleys, oak trees," says Paul.

"We farm — grain, cereal, wheat, oats. We've got horses, sheep, ducks, chickens, geese, hamsters, lots of animals. Linda's very good looking after them. We do have help (two male managers) for mucking out the barns and the heavy stuff.

"We're very ecologist-minded. It's sort of cranky," he says, grinning in embarrassment, "but we don't think of it as cranky. We don't preach. We just live that way.

"We're both nature lovers, very animal-minded. We don't shoot pheasants, we don't fox hunt. We don't kill the sheep because we're such animal lovers. We just do wool.

"People think we're cranky, but it's governed by one thing. Does something have to be killed to eat it? It's nothing else. It's great because all the phaesants on our land don't have to hide."

McCartney used to fish, but says he always regretted his catches when they were wiggling on the end of his hook.

"I really don't feel I have the right to kill animals. I'd feel really bad about killing you right now. I wouldn't like to do it," he says, a smile creeping up on him.

"Because you're a person I'd get into trouble. If it was a rabbit, I wouldn't. Poor little things. They just haven't got rights because they can't speak. They'd have lawyers if they could speak.

"Imagine that — little bunny lawyers..." He imitates a bunny lawyer arguing his case in court.

He and Linda are not above pulling a fast one on neighbors who come for their first McCartney "barbecue," featuring Worthington-brand "meats" — soybean-based products imported just for the family from the United States.

"We have barbecues with the stuff," says McCartney enthusiastically. "We fooled two of our neighbors. They got quite annoyed with us because they said, 'We thought you were vegetarians' and we said, 'Well, that was it. That was vegetarian.'

"Fooled 'em all evening."

He confides too that he is doing a bit of running. He started at age 40.

"I'm a childish runner. I like the feeling of the wind in my nose," he says. "I run just a couple of miles in the morning, nothing serious at all. I just like it. It reminds me of my childhood.

"Sometimes James comes along with me. That's a great excuse to stop a lot."

Community Service Center announces its fall programs

NEWTON – The Newton Community Service Centers, Inc., is preparing for the start of its 77th year of service.

Among some of the Centers regular programs outlined in the brochure are the following:

The Infant Toddler Program, which provides full time care for children between three months and two years nine months old, located in the newly renovated facility at 492 Waltham St. in West Newton.

The Day Care Pre-School and School Age Programs continue to serve the needs of the comunity.

A nutritious hot lunch and two daily snacks are served to preschoolers and kindergarten children in the School Age Program. Children in both programs are enrolled on a full tuition or sliding fee scale basis for income eligible families.

The School Age Program will emphasize creative and recreational activities. The program will be scheduled with a view towards the specific needs of individual children in an after-school program.

Infant-toddler operates daily from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. while Pre and School Age programs are as follows:

Pre-School: 7:30 a.m. - 6 p.m.
School Age Program: 3-6 p.m. - Monday, Wednesday, Friday
1-6 p.m. - Tuesday, Thursday
11:45 a.m. - 6 p.m. - Kindergarten

The purpose of the Newton Family Day Care System is two-fold: to provide a caring, safe and nurturing environment where children can grow, flourish and be happy; and to provide training, support, and education for individuals who provide home-based child care. Providers are licensed by the Office for Children and the homes are supervised by the Family Day Care staff. Full or part time care may be arranged. Hours are similar to Pre-school. Contact Gary Peter DeAngelis, director, at 969-5906.

Woodworking (The Splinter Club) activity is operated by Al Caplan, who for many years conducted this program in Waban. Caplan is a teacher in the local school system and has several years experience as a camp director in Northern New England.

A number of services under the direction of Larry Hasenfus are being provided for adolescents and their families.

The Newton Youth Center coordinates several neighborhood youth centers for area teenagers. Activities vary and include: dances, trips, drop-in centers, team sports, gym programs, and others. This is an opportunity to get involved and create your own program.

The Newton Job Bank is a free employment service for youth, ages 13-21. The Job Bank includes many listings of both full and part-time opportunities in the home or business.

Hours are 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The service is free to employees and employers.

The Theatre Arts Program consists of two basic aspects: one for junior high and one for high school students. The program remains flexible so that it can grow with and respond to the needs of and interests of the youth involved. The program includes mime, movement, song, dance and skits.

"Discovery Theatre" has been improvisational in nature, and deals with peer pressure, parental problems, drugs, alcohol, etc. Presentations will be made to parent as well as teen groups. For information call 969-5906.

"Option's" works in conjunction with the Department of Social Services to find families able to provide temporary living situations for adolescents from the Newton, Weston, Wellesley and Needham area. The program's goal is to arrange an alternative living situation without alienating these young people from their community ties. Ultimately, Option's seeks to reunite them with their families. Parents and single people who care about teenagers are needed to become Option parents.

A program preparing adolescents for independent living situations. Through a series of workshops, young people learn skills basic to self-maintenance.

This year NCSC will be actively involved in the community recruiting parents for Foster Care. The need for parents who care enough to share their families and their love with another is very great.

A full range of dance classes as well as aerobic exercise groups are scheduled throughout the day. Classes in ballet, creative movement, jazz, pointe, modern, tap, as well as the aerobic exercise are all offered under the direction of Joanne Langione.

In addition to listed adult programs, NCSC Inc. offers friendly, warm, and sociable clubs. They consist of those people who get together to participate in a varied program. Anyone who feels that he or she would like to join such a group or who knows of some person in the neighborhood who would, please contact the Centers. Card playing, movie parties, trips, and sales are a sampling of some of the activities for members.

The Retired Senior Volunteer Program, an area-wide program serving Newton, Wellesley and Weston funded by Action and local communties. Under the administration of the Newton Community Service Centers, Inc. RSVP has been established to enable older persons to utilize their time, experience and skills to serve their own communities.

Hiroshima Panels: A chance to learn

By Frank DeBenedetto
Correspondent

NEWTON — If Newton residents don't know what happened in Hiroshima on Aug. 6, 1945, or don't know the effects that a nuclear war would have on civilization, they now have a chance to learn.

Newton is the first community in the Commonwealth to display the "Hiroshima Panels," a series of educational billboards now featured in the city hall rotunda, according to Caroline Graboys, of the Greater Boston Physicians for Social Responsibility (PSR), an organization devoted to educating people on the medical hazards of the nuclear arms race.

At a recent dedication ceremony, Graboys said the panels have an important purpose for residents here.

"These are made to show the effects and dangers of a nuclear war," she said. "A crucial part in any democracy is to inform the electorate, and that's what these are here for."

According to Newton School Superintendent John Strand, also present at the dedication, educating the children of the city on the horrors of nuclear war is also important.

"We are trying to educate children in four areas," he said. "We begin with helping the childen understand the fears they have of such an event. We teach them to develop ways of resolving conflicts through more peaceful negotiations. For the older children, those in junior high schools, we try to expand the knowledge of the effects of nuclear weapons, and then we complete the cycle by teaching them about our relations with other countries, such as the Soviet Union."

Mayor Theodore D. Mann said he felt that each community should have an "obligation" to advise its citizens of what would happen in the event of a nuclear war. He admitted having a closeness with the event at Hiroshima, as he recalled his days in WWII when he was commissioned on a ship that was struck by a kamikaze plane in the Pacific.

"It is my fervent hope that this is emulated, not only here, but around the world," Mann said.

Information on the panels, provided by the National Security Council, includes such facts as:

•How many people would be killed in a nuclear war: 140 million in the U.S. alone, or roughly 17 times the population of New York City.

•The U.S. now has 9,200 nuclear warheads aimed at the U.S.S.R.

•The radioactivity of a nuclear blast would last 30 to 60 years, as scientists have estimated it would on Bikini Island, which was in the proximity of a nuclear test in 1954.

•Both superpowers now posess 2,500 times all the firepower used in the World War II.

•A nuclear blast would deplete the ozone layer to the point where exposure in the sun for 90 minutes would cause second to third degree burns for a person, and kill most plant life as we know it.

The panels were designed chiefly by Dr. Loring Conant, a Harvard psychologist and member of PSR, according to Graboys.

The lesson taught by the panels was made clear by Dr. Monika Eisenbud, of PSR.

"Never again must a nuclear weapon be used against humanity," she said."

Fume search takes new focus

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTONVILLE — The search for the cause of symptoms afflicting residents in the Cabot Park section of Newtonville has switched from a Norwood Avenue circuit board factory to a neighboring glass manufacturer, the city's health commissioner said.

According to Commissioner Bernice Joyal, officials at CFC Inc., have taken steps toward installing a pollution control device, despite the fact that air samples taken in and near the plant provided no concrete evidence that the factory is emitting hazardous fumes affecting the health of abutters.

With the situation at CFC apparently resolved, the health department has asked state occupational hygeine specialists to monitor the air in another Norwood Avenue factory, Multi-pane of New England Inc.

Patricia Circone, laboratory chief for the state Division of Labor and Industries (DLI), will soon test the air within Multipane to see if that factory could be the cause of itchiness, rashes, headaches, nausea and burning sensations experienced by as many as 20 neighbors of the Norwood Avenue manufacturing enclave, Joyal added.

By next week, she said, CFC should have installed an anti-pollution device that will eliminate any ammonia emissions that may be coming from the vent in the plant's roof.

> 'I'm glad to see people are looking in other directions ... We've cooperated. I can't think of anything more we can do at this moment.'
> Robert Spain, CFC president

Rep. David B. Cohen, who appealed for the health department's help on behalf of his constituents, took a cautious approach toward the apparent resolution of the CFC dispute.

"I'm hopeful that the anti-pollution device will be put in place, but it remains to be seen whether the symptoms will abate," said the 11th Middlesex District legislator.

Robert Spain, the president of CFC and Cohen's former political rival, said he undertook installation of the device at the suggestion of the health department and as "a further effort to dispel any fears and concerns our neighbors might have."

Spain reiterated that all the tests done by state and local officials failed to prove residents' claims that his operation constitutes a health hazard.

"We spend money all the time to make sure our workers are happy and to make our neighbors feel better. Contrary to what our representative (Cohen) says, profit is not the top line at all here," he said.

He added that the device cost his company "a lot of money."

"If neighbors are still looking for the source of pollution," Spain said he "would be glad" to pay for air sampling of fumes emitted by cars travelling on the nearby Massachusetts Turnpike at rush hour.

"I'm glad to see people are looking in other directions," he said of the Multi-pane probe. "We've cooperated. I can't think of anything more we can do at this moment."

According to Spain, CFC also complied with a request from officials of the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering for blueprints of his plant and a list of chemicals used in the creation of the computer circuit boards.

City out of money Monday

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The city will run out of the money to meet its daily operating expenses this Monday, a situation that will force the city treasurer to borrow an estimated $7 million, according to Deputy Tax Collector George W. Stiglich, Jr.

By the time this year's tax revenues begin to accumulate in city coffers, the borrowing effort will have cost taxpayers an estimated $42,000 - with the lost interest on potential tax revenue totalling about $5,000 and the bill for interest on the loan amounting to about $37,000, Stiglich said late last week.

The massive loan and subsequent costs represent the latest fall-out of the Board of Aldermen's failure to decide the city's fiscal 1985 tax burden, which would create new tax rates, for the past three weeks.

Stiglich said that if aldermen had decided the city's new tax burden on at their September 17 meeting the city definitely would

Songs for survival

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

NEWTON CENTRE — Some people go door to door with vacuum cleaners. Others conduct at-home kitchenware, clothing and cosmetic parties. Three weeks ago, Laurie Katz discovered a more original entrepreneurial route; mail-order poems and songs.

"Songs composed by a pro with lyrics written from information you provide," her new mail-order catalog, PGS ("Poems, gifts and songs") exclaims.

Katz has been writing her own songs and poetry since she was 11 years old. But why — at age 50 — has she suddenly decided to send them out through the mails?

It's "a matter of survival," she says.

Katz learned the true meaning of survival four years ago, when the Garden City resident and mother of two watched her husband walk out the door one morning to work in his Newton Centre drug store, and never saw him alive again. An hour after leaving the house, the 48-year-old pharmacist fell victim of a massive and fatal heart attack.

House fight almost over

By Kevin C. Kennedy
News Editor

NEWTON — According to a consensus of local state representatives, the grapple for the gavel in the State House is all over, with former majority whip George Keverian (D — Everett) ending up at the top of the heap after months of maneuvering against Speaker Thomas McGee (D — Lowell).

"As far as I'm concerned, it's over," State Rep. Susan Schur (D — Newton) said of the drawn out battle that already has stirred up some rules reforms in the state legislature. She has backed Keverian in his drive to be speaker of the house since the controversy began.

David Cohen (D — Newton), another consistent Keverian supporter, agreed with her, saying, "It's all over already. I think that probably it's apparent to everybody but the speaker and his closest circle."

School Committee versus the mayor

By Lisa J. Adams, Staff Writer

NEWTON — The tension ignited by unsettled teacher contract negotiations found its way into City Hall last Friday, where some School Committee members allege the mayor used a specially convened meeting to influence the bargaining process.

Mayor Theodore D. Mann called a special meeting Friday afternoon at 4 p.m., which was attended by all School Committee members, two Aldermen and several members of the mayor's staff.

At that time, some School Committee members say, the mayor not only expressed extreme dissatisfaction with the manner in which the committee has been handling the talks, but also verbally threatened members with legal action if they didn't change certain aspects of their negotiating stance.

"He threatened to bring criminal charges against three of us," School Committee member Angela Nielsen said. "The figure we voted on he said is irresponsible and will ruin the city. He thinks we are too sympathetic with the teachers. That's not true. We all see this as a common problem and we have come up with a responsible and reasonable figure," Nielsen said.

"He (the mayor) has made threats in the past since the Leominster decision (giving the Mayor bottom line budget authority), but this year it is more than it ever was in the past," Committee member Susan Silbey said in a separate interview. "He wants us to promise we know where we're getting the money from before we give it to the

Newtonville's Jim Forte

Frank, Forte campaign

Views of primary differ

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Congressman Barney Frank and his Republican challenger, Newtonville resident Jim Forte, have taken two very different views on Forte's showing in the recent, uncontested September primary.

Frank, who said Forte is practicing "grade school politics" by comparing his finish to former Wellesley Rep. Margaret M. Heckler's primary showing against him in 1982, believes the Fourth Congressional District results should be taken "as very disappointing news" in the Republican's camp, while Forte said he was "pleased" with the number of votes and "non-votes" he recieved.

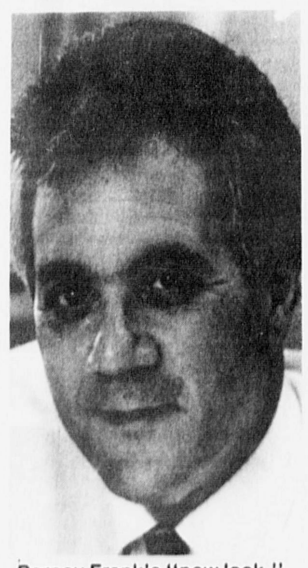

Frank, who won Garden City voters support handily, came away from the September 18 tilt with 58,733 votes and the 28-year-old Forte, a political novice, received 19,497 throughout the 23 cities and towns in the district.

More importantly, 83.3 percent of all those casting Democratic ballots took the time to vote for Frank, while 67.2 percent of those voting Republican pulled the lever for Forte, who recently received the endorsement of President Ronald Reagan.

Frank said the number of non-votes, or blank ballots, cast for his challenger show he did "very poorly," while Forte contended he received the turnout he "suspected" and said it showed he had "enough name recognition throughout the district to get a reasonably low percentage of blank ballots for a person running for the first time."

The two politicians also differed over the validity of com-

BC incident raises civil rights questions

NEWTON — A Newton District Court judge has set Oct. 26 as the trial date for Newton Centre native Harlan E. Jones, who was arrested two weeks ago during a lecture by conservative author William F. Buckley, Jr., at Boston College.

Jones, a sophomore at Boston University, is the son of School Committee Vice Chairman Katherine E. Jones, the Ward 2 representative, and Hubert L. Jones, dean of the School of Social Work at BU. His parents are currently in Europe and have not yet been informed of his arrest, Jones said.

The 21-year-old student will face another misdemeanor charge in addition to the allegation of disorderly conduct brought against him by BC police.

Appearing before Presiding Justice Monte G. Basbas, Jones waived his right to a jury trial in the controversial case and will appear in court on Oct. 12, when both prosecution and defense attorneys are expected to present initial motions.

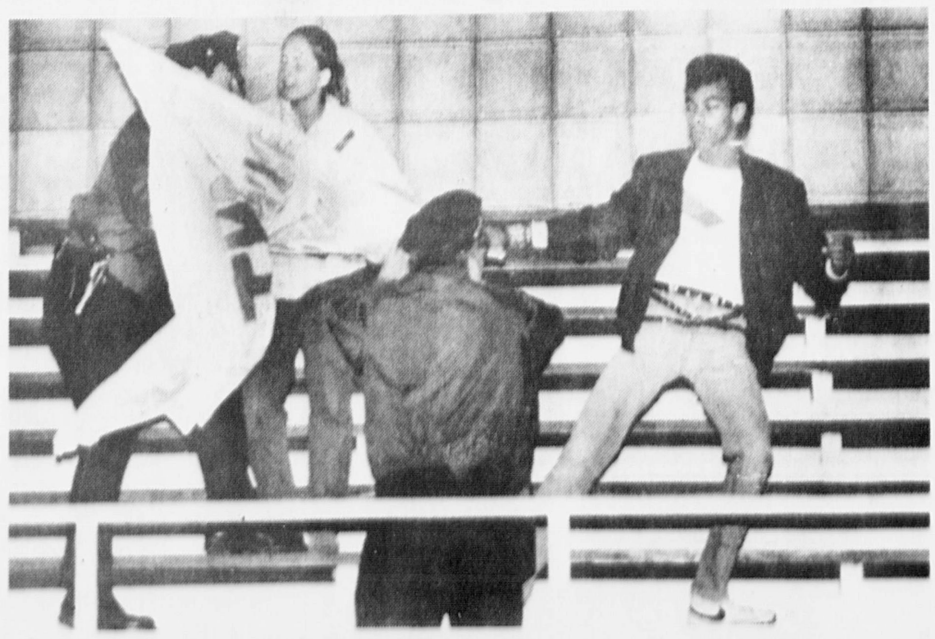

Jones, who said he is "keeping open" the option of bringing a suit against BC alleging a violation of his civil and First Amendment rights during the incident, refused to confirm or deny rumors that BC officials offered him a cash payment and public apology in return for a promise that no suit be brought against the university.

"I don't want to burn any bridges," said Jones, who lives in an Allston apartment and is hoping to pursue a career in electronic media at BU's School of Public Communication.

Jones said he paid $2 to attend Buckley's speech, which served as a prelude to the school's controversial Social Justice Lecture Series, and was approached during the event by BC sophomore Denise Paquin, whom he said he had never met before.

Paquin first asked Jones if he was enjoying the lecture and then asked him to help her hold a ban-

The city's third state representative, Joseph DeNucci (D — Newton, Waltham), while not sharing his colleagues' sense of finality, commented that recent developments make the contest "look very difficult for the speaker." DeNucci, who long ago made loyalty one of the hallmarks of his distinguished political career, has insisted all along that he would stick with McGee, despite a close friendship with Keverian. "I'm still with Tom McGee," he commented. "My position has not changed." Torn between loyalty and friendship, DeNucci said of the struggle, "Inside, it's painful...personally and politically."

Among the recent developments to which DeNucci referred was a release put out by Keverian's office that named his supporters in the speaker fight and promised the majority of the house would side with him before the January vote.

After Keverian's list came out, the Boston press depicted an exasperated Speaker McGee who reportedly told members of the Boston delegation in the legislature the Hub would be denied appropriations totalling $100 million unless they sided with him.

DeNucci said the comments attributed to McGee were "something said without much thought. If he had the choice to do it again, he probably would not. It was a reaction out of hurt...without thinking." He added his opinion that the press made more of McGee's comments than they deserved.

Cohen said that McGee's comments to the Boston delegation were part of a long legacy of "reward, threats and flattery" that has become the machinery for conducting business in the House. "It's clear that McGee will continue to try to switch votes using the techniques he's always used," he said.

All three local reps were encouraged by the results of the long battle for the gavel in the House, especially the opening up of the legislative process that has proceeded from rules reforms. Cohen commented that his constituents "can expect to see the end of a constant stream of bad bills, special interest bills, embarrassing bills.... Legislation will be more open, responsible and issue-oriented.

"Legislation that deals with local communities will be judged by its merits rether than by who happens to be sponsoring it," Cohen said.

Schur said the opening up of the legislative process, which Keverian has promised since he first issued his challenge to McGee, means, "I'll be in a better position to make sure legislation benefitting the city will be duly considered."

She added, "More bills will be considered on merit. They won't be stashed away" to be brought out under politically advantageous conditions.

DeNucci was positive about recent changes in the rules of the House, harbingers of what might come under Keverian's rule, but he cautioned that too much "watering down" of the existing leadership setup on Beacon Hill. "We're seeing a lot of changes," he said. "A lot of good legislation is being addressed, and a lot of the bad is being left out. the effect is positive."

But he warned that "mindless, knee jerk rules changes, left and right, with no direction" would have an adverse effect on the workings of the legislature. "Leadership with input," he commented, is preferable to "input without leadership. You have to have leadership with direction. A lot of the reforms we're fighting for can be achieved with common sense and statesmanship."

Schur commented that, although Keverian has been billed as "a born-again rules reformer," his long career in the House will lead him to be cautious in his realignment of leadership.

DeNucci, who, as chairman of the House Human Services Committee, oversees the largest budget on the hill, concluded, "Up to this point, the public hasn't lost anything. It remains to be seen what will happen after January."

Closing of South will be 'explored'

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Would closing Newton South High School make good consolidation sense?

At the last meeting of the School Committee, the Community Advisory Committee on Long-Range Financial Planning briefly mentioned as part of their outline of cutback recommendations that the Public Schools take a look at further consolidation of schools. Mentioned in that recommendation was the Newton South High School.

At that time, one of the financial planning committee's spokespersons, Terry Holzman said, "We're not saying that you should close the high school. But the $1 million a year savings should be explored."

When asked what the possibilities of actually closing the high school are, Gentile responded that, until the advisory committee's presentation, the thought had never occurred to the School Committee.

But since the report, they will have to at least look at it, Gentile said.

"First the issue was that we would probably be closing another junior high school," Gentile said. "Particularly the Bigelow Junior High School, because of its size and location and so forth. But then the Long-Range Advisory Committee came up with a report which suggests South should be looked at."

Despite the most recent consolidation of the Hyde and Oak Hill elementary schools, the finance report pointed to 2,200 empty seats in the schools this year and projected over 3,200 empty seats in 1988-89, 2,400 of which would be found in the secondary schools.

"The committee recommended that before we close another junior high school, we first look at the high school," Gentile said.

"The closing of a junior high within the next few years precludes the option of possible consolidation at the high school level in future years," according to the report.

"We'll have to make a decision this year," Gentile said.

She's singing songs for survival super duper marriage"), Katz decided to try and keep "Laurie's Korner" open. But her attempts were soon foiled by thieves and pilfering employees, who robbed her house as well. If that weren't enough, she also lost her mother and brother-in-law to fatal heart attacks that year.

That was when Katz remembered slipping into a dream.

"You know how you're there but not really there?" she says with amazement. "I functioned in a haze. Somehow, I got a job and kept on going. But I forgot to pick up the house, to vacuum the carpet and the dust just started piling up."

In fact, it took one more tragedy three years later — the death of her dog — to jolt Katz back into reality.

"It was like coming out of a shock, a cloud," she explains. "When the dog died, I realized I had to go on. I told myself, 'I'm not dead yet. I'm not going to lose the house, now.' I decided with my last ounce of strength I would try to make a go of it."

Katz has "gone for it," and seemingly with a great deal of gusto. As she reclines on the couch of the home where she's lived for 16 years, every sentence which emerges from her mouth is punctuated with a giggle. Consumed with hopes for the future, her words hop carelessly over past tragedies now grown small.

Her blond hair is swept up above and around her head; blue and black triangle earrings which dangle two inches below her ear shiver and swing as she chatters excitedly about the "unique" gifts, in addition to tailored poems and songs, displayed in her catalog.

"If someone is looking for a gift for someone, but they're not sure what, I'll do their shopping for them," says Katz. "All they have to do is leave a message on the back of the catalog describing the person for whom they're buying."

She jabs a painted fingernail at printed renditions of portable clothes steamers, digital walking meters and "charming charms," all offered at bargain prices and "buy one, get one free" rates for interested customers.

"Busy? Tied up? Alone? We'll do your gift shopping while you stay at home. Catalog requests," the back of the package she has been mailing to random area residents reads.

"It's a personal, trusting kind of service," Katz says. "I've got good taste."

In addition to helping her stay above water financially, Katz says designing and selling her personal poems and songs, is "doing what I used to by mail."

What she "used to do," before her husband died, was conduct singing engagements at night clubs and for community organizations.

Katz briefly explains how her show business career was also one of those things in life which crumbled under the weight of certain obstacles. At age 17, when her parents arranged to have her sing with the orchestra at the then-famed Concord Hotel in New York State, Buddy Hackett "discovered" her and she was soon offered a part in the upcoming Broadway show "High Button Shoes."

But the offer died before it was even real.

"My mother was a staunch believer that 'only bad girls go into show business,'" Katz says, scrunching up her face in mock imitation.

"Back then, you did what your parents said."

But once she was married, Katz was discovered once more by record producers who changed her name from Lorraine Katz to Laurie Kaye, and recorded two of her original songs, "Just Yesterday" and "Love Is.."

Although the songs didn't get far and she doesn't sing too much publicly these days, Katz is determined to make her latest "Poem, gifts, and songs" catalog work.

And what if it doesn't?

"I'll try something else," Katz says, laughing.

City may join in on nationwide asbestos suit

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

NEWTON — If all of the phone calls and research being conducted right now by the City Solicitor get positive results, the Garden City may be able to get some help paying for the costs of asbestos removal at the Newton North High School.

Although City Solicitor Daniel M. Funk said last week that the city is interested in joining the class action suit approved by a federal judge, he added that no definite action has been taken because it is "still not clear how (the suit) works. It seems to imply that we're all automatically in it, unless we want to get out of it," Funk said.

U.S. District Judge James Kelly issued the ruling last week for three Pennsylvania and one South Carolina school districts. The districts reportedly have joined together in one class for a lawsuit against all 55 manufacturers of asbestos, excluding the Johns Manville Corp., which has gone bankrupt.

According to reports, the federal decision should allow for other cases throughout the nation to be handled in one court proceeding.

Funk noted the City's Law Department has contacted the State Department of Education, The Boston School Committee's attorney and are waiting for a call from the Attorney General's office in an attempt to gather more information on the suit. But so far, he said "no one knows much more than we do about it, except what we've seen in the newspapers.

"It seems like a novel approach to a novel issue," Funk said. "If there's a way to do it, we'd like to."

Although the Building Commissioner could not be reached for total costs of the asbestos removal projects, started in 1978. Costs for last summer alone exceeded $527,000, while a previous project cost more than $800,000.

Mayor presents fiscal plan to guide city through 1991

By Edward Cafasso, Staff Writer

NEWTON — Mayor Theodore D. Mann has presented the Board of Aldermen with an extensive, $54 million schedule of the city's capital improvement needs from 1986 to 1991.

The primary focus of the proposed document, known as the Capital Improvement Plan (CIP), is protection of the health and safety of residents and the prevention of physical deterioration of the city's community assets.

The CIP, which calls for exactly $54,443,000 to be spent on numerous capital programs over the next six years, serves "as a form of blueprint for the city's physical transition into the 21st century" and represents "an integral component of the city's long-range financial plan," which requires the city maintain a consistent committment of bonded indebtedness for physical improvements, according to the mayor.

Much of the spending called for in the CIP represents "up-front monies," significant expenditures which the city will most likely receive reimbursement for through federal and state grant money.

Aldermanic Finance Committee Chairman Paul E. Coletti, who was briefed on the CIP earlier this week, called the document's objectives "ambitious to say the least" and said it accurately reflected the city's attempt to "come to grips" with maintenance items ignored at the onset of Proposition 2½.

"If we follow this program, the financial security of the city should be guaranteed through the rest of this century," Coletti said, adding that he believes aldermen will take the current CIP more seriously than previous packages.

Mann stressed that the CIP should not be considered a budget, but rather a program that inventories the city capital needs and identifies probable funding sources to meet those needs. Such long-range planning is "a dynamic process" which could require modification depending on changes in the city's needs, he added.

Approximately 66 percent of the total proposed expenditure, or a little over $36 million, is dedicated to public works improvements and maintenance,

> 'If we follow this program, the financial security of the city should be guaranteed through the rest of this century.'

including major sewer system renovations citywide, on-going street, sidewalk and curbing repairs, and the construction of permanent facilities to house the fleet of public works vehicles, as well as for storage of sand and salt for snow removal.

About 2 percent, or about $1.3 million, of the city's planned capital spending until 1991 will be devoted to public safety improvements, primarily focussing on fire apparatus replacement and maintenance of police and fire headquarters.

A total of $3.1 million, or about 6 percent of the CIP, is committed to public building maintenance and improvements. If a request currently before aldermen for a $100,000 comprehensive study of the city's needs in this area is approved, the study's conclusions will be used as the framework for a $3 million, multi-year municipal building improvement program within the CIP.

Approximately $11.2 million, or almost 21 percent of the CIP, is earmarked for capital improvements in the school department's physical plant, with $4.8 million of that amount dedicated to energy efficeincy improvements and the majority of the remainder planned for site renovations.

Some of the CIP will also go toward planning projects like the acquisition of housing and a total of $361,000, of which 80 percent will probably be reimbursed through grants, is committed to conservation efforts.

Planned improvement projects...

The following represents some of the capital improvement projects provided for the city's 1986-1991 Capital Improvement Plan, along with cost and the probable year when work will begin:

•Present to 1991 — $2,154,000 to be spent on water main rehabilitation, with an average of $300,000 in water receipts expended each year.

•Present to 1991 — $10,325,000 to be spent rehabiltating the city's sewer system, with $2 million a year from fiscal 1987 to fiscal 1991 earmarked for the project. State and federal grant monies are xpected to pay for about $7 million of the total and the remainder coming from city-financed bond issues.

•1986 — $345,000 for new carpeting throughout Newton North High School and Day Junior High.

•1987 — A $1.2 million bond issue for roof repairs at South High, Bigelow and Day Junior high schools, and the Burr, Cabot, Franklin, Lincoln-Eliot, Memorial-Spaulding and Underwood elementary schools.

•1987 — A $1.2 million bond issue for repairs to the exterior brickwork at the Angier, Bowen, Burr, Cabot, Countryside, Mason Rice, Memorial-Spaulding and Underwood elementary schools.

•1987 — $373,000 in free cash and grants to improve television production and culinary arts facilties at Newton North High School.

•1988 — $40,000 in free cash and grant monies to acquire a 3.25 acre tract of land near Goddard and Christina streets for conservation purposes.

•1991 — $400,000 in free cash and grant monies for phase II of the Cold Spring Park Development Program to create new ballfields, picnic grounds, hiking trails and a duck pond that will freeze for ice skating in the winter.

•1990 & 1991 — $216,000 from the same sources to redevelop Allison Park to provide tennis, bocci and basketball courts, along with softball and soccer fields.

•1986 — $400,000 in bonded monies and grants for improvements to the newly acquired Novitiate/Winchester Park.

Fall cleanup starts Monday

Fall Cleanup Week, running from Oct. 15 to 21, will see the city's Parks and Recreation Department, the Department of Public Works, the Urban Beautification Commission and village groups from all over the city working together to improve the appearance of the Garden City.

Various plantings have been planned, and residents are encouraged to bag fallen leaves for pickup along with their regular trash.

The annual Harvest Fair, held Sunday on Newton Centre green, was a day filled with food and fun for the kids this year. Trucking trouble

Public outrage at Newton District Court's recent decision to punish a truck driver who killed an elderly motorist at the corner of Commonwealth Avenue and Walnut Street with two years' probation and a $25 fine is understandable enough, but it misses the mark.

With a guilty ruling from the court, the victim's family can pursue the matter further with some hope for success. But the awful accident that saw an overweight truck, loaded with bricks, hurtle through the intersection to take a life is a small part of a larger problem.

Truck drivers seem to think the rules of the road are not for them. They are out there to make a living. They have schedules, and they are usually behind, trying to make up time. The rules can be stretched, in that situation.

That is why, when you are tooling along the Pike trying to make a little time — you are pressing it to 65 m.p.h and keeping a sharp out for one of those infamous police-sponsored, radar-based fishing tournies — you can watch a huge semi with two trailers blow by you as if you were going backwards.

Only increased public awareness can make this problem a top priority for the authorities. It will be difficult. Some of the most eloquent testimony against existing enforcement of the law was buried under a ton of bricks at the bottom of Heartbreak Hill.

Dangerous rain

Los Angeles may have its smog, but the percentage of acid rain falling on New England is one of the worst life-threatening crises we face.

An analysis of rainfall and snow in 12 New England locations last year showed that acidity levels were generally far above normal — the rate recorded in Vermont last year was 355 times as acidic as unpolluted rain.

And, the analysis said the average acidity of rain collected in continuously monitored locations was 12 to 24 times that of pure water.

The report, published last week, provided the most recent results of an ongoing study that was begun in 1980 to document the problems of acid rain — a form of air pollution environmentalists contend is the product of coal-burning plants in the Midwest.

They have argued that sulfur dioxide particles emitted by the plants drift on prevailing winds, then are carried to earth by rain and snow — wreaking their greatest environmental harm in the Northeast.

As compared to the use of nuclear energy in the manufacture of electricity, for which thousands of demonstrators annually protest, acid rain, which draws little formal opposition, is the far more serious problem threatening the future of life on this planet.

Women in fight for life

By George R. Plagenz

Never underestimate the power of a woman. Few of us do. But an aroused woman is something else — even more formidable.

"An aroused woman is unstoppable," says Dr. Helen Caldicott, who is out to halt the global drift toward nuclear war by arousing the women of the world.

She has taken a leave of absence from her position on the faculty of Harvard Medical School and on the staff of Children's Medical Center in Boston to work with Women's Action for Nuclear Disarmament (WAND), which she organized.

The message WAND chapters across the country are delivering is that women must take more responsibility for the survival of the world. They are being urged to register to vote and to cast their ballot in November for the candidate most likely to bring an end to the arms race.

This could be more dangerous to President Reagan's chances than the pro-ERA and pro-choice women's vote combined. The head of one WAND chapter says women who have never been into political activity are enlisting in the anti-nuclear peace movement.

"Many of our members are women with young children," she says. "Our cause appeals to families fearful for the future development of their children."

These mothers have been frightened — and aroused — by Dr. Caldicott's warnings about the dreaded effects of a nuclear war.

"Picture," she says, "what the world will be like after a nuclear blast. The sick and injured will die alone because most doctors will themselves be victims and the hospitals will be destroyed.

Dr. Helen Caldicott of Newton

"Food and clean water will be unavailable and the survivors will die from a combination of radiation sickness, infection, starvation and grief. People within 40 miles of a nuclear blast who look in the direction of the explosion will be instantly blinded. Atmospheric shock waves will render us all stone deaf."

Even strong people can take only so much of this kind of graphic realism before "psychic numbing" (or denial) sets in. There is a natural reluctance to think about such an unpleasant subject.

But if most, to maintain their emotional equilibrium, refuse to give their attention to the horrors of a nuclear war, some are different.

Mothers particularly.

Dr. Caldicott, a pediatrician and mother of three, knows this. That is why she is taking her crusade to the women of the world.

"Women give life. Maybe that's why they feel a responsibility for preserving life," says Luisa Morgantina, a member of the Milan Peace Committee in Italy who spoke recently in Columbus, Ohio, under the auspices of WAND.

Four other leaders of the women's anti-nuclear peace movement in Europe are accompanying Ms. Morgantina on a five-state tour of this country. They want to arouse U.S. women to the threat of nuclear war, which, they say, can come as much by accident as by design.

"In Germany, with missiles deployed all around us, we feel the threat more acutely than U.S. women do," said Heide Dann, who was recently elected to the German parliament. "It is as if we are tasting the beginning of World War III."

I shudder to think of what it will be like if the worst fears of these women become reality. Much as I dislike the idea of dying, I am more horrified by the prospect of surviving a nuclear war. Khrushchev once said that in a nuclear war the living will envy the dead.

Let the brave say they are not afraid to die. The point is, in a nuclear war you can't count on dying!

I cherish freedom as much as anybody. But freedom is for people. We must remember that. It is insane to win freedom when there will be no people left to enjoy that freedom.

(George R. Plagenz is a national columnist for Newspaper Enterprise Association.)

'Collective guilt' and the law

By Edward F. King

Obesity is bad for health. Should government ban candy and hold mandatory exercise classes?

My friend Mike lives in an apartment in South Boston. Mike is retired and lives on a fixed and limited income. Two or three times a week he walks up the street to his neighborhood pub. They have a 50¢ beer special every night between 5 and 7 p.m.

Mike has a sandwich and a beer (sometimes two) and then walks home. Because of the special prices, Mike's small pension suffices.

But now, thanks to the beneficent wisdom of our state legislature and governor, Mike's fun days are numbered. So-called "Happy Hours" are being outlawed. With the good intentions of meddlers everywhere, our all-knowing public officials will curtail the pleasure of thousands of good citizens because of the actions of a very few. With the same myopic mentality that disarms law-abiding citizens in a misguided attempt to inhibit criminals, it is now going to be illegal to offer special low-price drinks during designated time periods.

It is astonishing to this writer how deeply the "collective guilt" syndrome has permeated our society. Thus, we are all responsible for napalm in Vietnam, mass murders, poverty, hunger, war, disease, warts, and psoriasis. Now drunken drivers are added to the list.

The overwhelming majority who walk home from Happy Hours or who have one or two well-spaced drinks or who use public transportation will no longer get price breaks, and instead of police power being used to catch drunken drivers we will have detectives making the rounds to make sure that prices are kept high. The same people that insist on punishing landlords for raising prices too high will now harass bartenders for making them too low.

There is no question that an overwhelming majority of our people approve of the ban on Happy Hours, and that is a sad commentary on our society. For people that depend on government to make adult decisions for them will soon sacrifice their freedoms.

Obesity is bad for health. Should government ban candy and hold mandatory exercise classes"

We have warnings on cigarette packages, 55-miles-per-hour speed limits, and now a ban on Happy Hours. I hope that no one ever investigates the germs that are passed in kissing. Where would it end?

A big deal over some small talk

By Dick West

There has been a lot of speculation about what President Reagan and Andrei Gromyko, the Soviet foreign minister, might have said to each other at their first meeting.

Although the White House has not issued a transcript, it is safe to assume the conversation went something like this:

The president said he was pleased to meet the foreign minister after all these years and wanted to welcome him to Washington.

Gromyko replied that he was happy to be here.

Reagan asked about the health of Soviet President Konstantin Chernenko.

Gromyko said the last time he had seen Chernenko he was looking well. Gromyko then asked how Mrs. Reagan was feeling.

The president replied that the first lady was looking well the last time he had seen her. Even now, he said, Mrs. Reagan was upstairs having her hair done.

The foreign minister asked if Mrs. Reagan was getting a Geraldine Ferraro hairdo. He said that in his opinion the first lady would really look good with her hair done in that style.

The president said that has far as he knew Mrs. Reagan was planning no major changes in her hair style before November.

Gromyko asked how the president's re-election campaign was going.

Very well, Reagan replied. He said all the polls showed him far ahead.

Gromyko said he had heard there had been some kind of a delay in doing over the White House kitchen.

The president smiled faintly but did not verbally respond.

Gromyko then asked what was the best way to get back to the Soviet Embassy without going through Rock Creek Park. The president answered that he didn't do much driving himself anymore but would be glad to ask the Secret Service.

Gromyko next observed that the weather had been very nice during his U.S. visit although a bit on the cool side.

Reagan agreed it had been somewhat cool for this time of year but said it had been pretty dry in these parts most of September. He then asked whether Gromyko ever rode horses.

The foreign minister replied that what with one thing and another, mostly foreign travel, he couldn't find time for riding.

The president commented that he didn't get to ride as much as he would like either. He said he did most of his riding back on the ranch in California.

Speaking of that, Gromyko inquired whether the president had any plans to move back to the ranch.

Reagan replied that the ranch was a nice place to visit but he wouldn't want to live there as long as he had a residence at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.

Gromyko asked if Reagan wished him to convey any messages to the folks back in the Kremlin.

The president said he hoped Gromyko would remember him to Chernenko.

Gromyko said he surely would do that and remarked that he had better be running along as it was getting late.

The president thanked the foreign minister for stopping by and said he should feel free to drop in anytime he was in the neighborhood. He told Gromyko to keep in touch.

The foreign minister promised to do so.

Population shifts bode ill for liberals

By William A. Rusher

Millions of youngsters have come of voting age for whom the word "Vietnam" is not a traumatic shriek of pain but merely somebody else's war that didn't work out too successfully.

Liberal analysts have been staggered recently by polls indicating that younger voters overwhelmingly favor President Reagan for re-election. And even some conservatives will privately admit to being surprised by the recent resurgence of patriotism – a related phenomenon that also cuts in Mr. Reagan's favor, despite the San Francisco Democratic convention's belated rediscovery of the American flag.

These developments are rooted in demographic changes that we tend not to notice until their consequences are halfway down our throats. The most famous example was the huge population shift in the 1950s and '60s, from the Northeast to the more individualistic "Sun Belt" of the South and the West. This brought in its wake the great swing of American politics to the right, beginning in the mid-1960s and culminating in the election of 1980.

The response of the left, partly deliberate and partly instinctive, was to try to poison the whole Vietnam generation, and especially its college element, against American society in general – a maneuver that succeeded in making a political shambles out of the early 1970s, but only delayed the general rightward trend.

Now the Vietnam generation is in its 30s – older and sadder, if not always wiser – and millions of youngsters have come of voting age for whom the word "Vietnam" is not a traumatic shriek of pain but merely somebody else's war that didn't work out too successfully. Give these young people a president to look up to, a bunch of Chernenkos to compare him with, and an occasional Grenada to cheer about, and patriotism just naturally bubbles out of them.

But that isn't all. The oncoming generation is far better educated than its predecessors, and – contrary to what many people suppose – that tends to make them more resistant, rather than less, to the blandishments of the left. As Horace Busby pointed out recently in the Public Affairs Review, when FDR was elected in 1932, more than 85 percent of American males had less than a high school education. In fact, more than half of them hadn't even completed grade school. Fifty years later, 82 percent of all Americans from 25 to 34 (men and women alike) had completed high school.

That's bad news for old-style demagogues and snake-oil peddlers like Tip O'Neill, who cut their political eye-teeth under FDR back in the good old days when not one voter in 10 suspected there was any connection between tax policy and economic stimulus. And it makes it well nigh impossible for Walter Mondale to persuade many voters today that his proposed tax increase is going to soak only corporations and "the rich."

Yet another demographic development of potentially great importance is the largely unnoticed but substantial influx of Orientals from their unstable Asian homelands to various key states such as California and New York. Like the Cubans who flooded Florida 20 years ago, these are predominantly middle-class families fleeing from the menace of communism, and they are contributing important amounts of valuable qualities to the polyglot American gene pool and culture: notably high intelligence and the Oriental work ethic.

Let these new and powerful elements work their way into the American social mix for two or three decades and you may be surprised at how they and their children react to the idea of a Handout State financed by their taxes. Add to them the Cuban-Americans, and large elements of the Mexican-American community whose American patriotism is intense and will only be fanned by the plans the Soviet Union has for their ancestral homeland, and the prospects for a successful revival of the American left will begin to look even bleaker than they do already.

Asbestos funding jeopardized

To The Editor:

Newton residents concerned as I am by the asbestos problem at Newton North will, I hope, write to President Reagan, EPA Adminstrator William Ruckelshaus, Barney Frank, Mayor Mann and school committee members to try to reverse Reagan's callous and illegal response to the serious problem of asbestos in schools. Congress recently voted to provide local school districts with interest free loans or grants to help with the cost of removing or sealing asbestos. Reagan signed the bill into law, but now, according to the Globe on September 28, Dr. John Moore of the EPA has testified before a Congressional committee that the Administration intends to ignore the law and withold the $600 million to find the program.

Reagan's action would seem incredible to me if it didn't fit right into a pattern of wildly distorted priorities he has demonstrated throughout his Presidency. This is the President who illegally eliminated benefits for thousands of disabled, but who is willing to buy the military a $436 hammer ans a $7,600 coffee maker. It is the President who has slashed almost every human service program and thinks the way to help education is to shoot a teacher into space. It seems as if the Reagan Adminstration opposes any program that just helps ordinary citizens and surports any expenditure, however mindless, that benefits military contractors.

I hope Newton citizens will have their priorities straight when they vote on November 6.

Contract settlement urged

An open letter to Mayor Mann, the Newton School Committee, and the Newton Teachers Association:

It is the unanimous hope of the Newton South High School P.T.S.A. officers and board (an elected group of about 50 people) that the contract negotiations between the School Committee and the Newton Teachers Association can be quickly and constructively concluded.

We commend the teachers for their professionalism in giving a strong start to the school year this fall, despite the frustration of not sensing the fullest community support for their services. As parents of South students, we are most appreciative of the quality of this faculty, which repeatedly demonstrates its caring for individual students and the development of their potential, both personal and academic. We want Newton's teachers to be encouraged in their work through as strong a financial reward as our financially hard-pressed community can afford.

Sincerely,
Frances C. Seasholes

Dispute grows after arrest at BC ner reading, "Paying $7,500 to an ultra-conservative, multi-millionaire is social injustice," according to Jones.

After unfurling the message in a balcony behind the podium where Buckley was speaking, BC police allegedly attempted to take the banner away from the pair and told Jones to either leave the auditorium or be arrested for trespassing. Jones refused to answer and BC police led him away in handcuffs, while Paquin left the area under an escort from student government officials.

The pre-trial hearing resulted in the misdemeanor charges against Jones, who has pleaded innocent, being changed for the third time since his Sept. 17 arrest. He was originally booked at the Newton police station on trespassing, but that allegation was dropped and replaced by a charge of disorderly conduct at an arraignment the morning after his arrest.

Assistant Middlesex County District Attorney Adrienne Lynch, who is prosecuting Jones on BC's behalf, said Sunday the student is now also charged with a misdemeanor under Chapter 272, Section 40 of state law for "willfully interrupting and disturbing a school or other assembly."

If found guilty of that charge, Jones could face one month in jail or a $50 fine.

His Boston-based attorney, David Kelston, said he is "hopeful" BC will ask Lynch to drop the charges against Jones "well before the trial." Kelston works in the firm of Silverglate, Gertner, Baker & Fine and is acting as "cooperating attorney" for the Massachusetts Civil Liberties Union in the case.

After the hearing, Kelston approached BC University Counsel Philip Burling, of the Foley, Hoag & Eliot law firm, and said it appeared to him that the school, through Lynch, meant to withdraw the disorderly conduct charge and replace it with the new, less serious allegation.

> 'Obviously, they're hypocrites if they're pursuing this. If they do, the whole ideology they claim to represent is empty or just talk.'
> Harlan Jones

"I thought they did too," Burling replied as he left the courthouse.

Contacted by phone, Burling referred all questions about the case to Lynch.

"I'm just along for the ride on this one," he said.

Asked why he thought no charges were brought against Paquin, Jones replied, "I would have to think it has something to do with sexism and racism. It may be benign, but sexism and racism are involved. She recruited me on the spot. It was just very spontaneous, not an organized protest by any means."

The arrest was the subject of a 20-minute meeting between Jones, Burling and arresting officer Sgt. Gene Neault a week-and-a-half ago. Jones said he came away from the session with the impression that "no one at BC is enthusiastic about pursuing the case.

"I think BC realizes now that they did this to the wrong person...Obviously, they're hypocrites if they're pursuing this. It's in their best interest not to. If they do, the whole ideology they claim to represent is empty or just talk. I'm positive that, eventually, this will be cleared up and BC will act responsibly," he said.

BC's handling of the incident involving Jones has come under criticism from several fronts. A week after the arrest, 10 BC professors wrote a letter to BC's student-run newspaper, "The Heights," asking school officials to drop all the charges against Jones, issue a full, public apology and requesting administrators "exercise the moral leadership...shown in the past."

Alderman Matthew Jefferson, president of the South Middlesex branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), sat in court yesterday with Jones and Kelston.

Jefferson said he has been attempting to persuade BC officials to drop the charges against Jones and blamed the school's "awfully heavy-handed" treatment of the incident on an "over-reaction on the part of BC police."

There were no verbal outbursts or disruptive demonstrations made by either Jones or Paquin, according to Jefferson and others who attended the lecture.

He said he could not say whether Jones' arrest was racially motivated, but added that the fact Paquin "got off scot-free" seemed to him "a miscarriage of justice."

Jefferson said when he asked BC officials for a meeting to discuss the incident and other civil rights issues on the campus, he was referred to Burling and declined to meet with him because his concerns were not legal ones.

Alderman Michael Malec, the chairman of BC's Sociology Department, echoed Jefferson's charge of "over-reaction" and said it seemed "ludicrous" to pursue the case if all that has been reported about Jones' arrest is true.

"It's been a considerable source of embarassment for the university," Malec added.

Jones said he has received offers of support from professors at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, local black community groups and former Boston mayoral candidate Mel King, who is "a close friend" of his father.

BC security guards hit area headlines recently when half of them were given guns for the first time.

Hospice is certified

WABAN — The Hospice of the Good Shepherd has been certified under the Medicare program, the first hospice to be certified in Massachusetts.

Executive Director Linda Kilburn said the certification entitles the hospice to "provide a wide range of specialized home and inpatient services to the terminally ill and their families."

The hospice has been caring for more than 550 patients and families since 1979 in the Newton Wellesley area. It is located on the grounds of the Newton-Wellesley hospital Hospital.

The hospice is working with three other hospice home care teams in the west suburban area to build the first free-standing hospice in-patient unit in the area.

This unit is expected to be located at the Claflin School site in Newtonville. Other groups are the Hospice at Home in Wayland, The Visiting Nurses Hospice of South Middlesex in Framingham and the Hospice Communcity Service of the Visiting Nurses Association in Dedham.

Frank, Forte face off

parisons made between Forte's and Heckler's primary runs in a recent Forte press release.

After touting Reagan's endorsement, the one-page letter states, "Forte...received four thousand more votes (19,495 to 15,306) in (the) primary than Republican Rep. Margaret Heckler...did in her similarly lone run for the Republican nomination in 1982."

It adds the fact that the district's Republican turnout was up wnd the Democratic showing down, with the parenthetical note, "Frank received 28 percent less votes in this year's Democratic primary than he tallied in the 1982 primary."

Frank called those numerical comparisons "an extraordinarily silly point," said Forte "appears to be running against Peg Heckler" and added that if his challenger employs "the same mathematical felicity" when formulating national fiscal policies, he will be a "bigger disaster" than any other politician he's seen.

This year's uncontested primary race took place in the backdrop of a hotly-contested statewide Republican primary between Ray Shamie and Elliot Richardson, which bolstered GOP turnout statewide, while the 1982 tilt with Heckler offered no such draw to Republican voters, he said.

"This is grade school politics," Frank added.

Forte said the point the comparison makes is "very valid. It means more people pulled the Republican lever and that Republican candidates like myself have a much broader base of support than two years ago," especially with Ronald Reagan and Ray Shamie in the race.

Forte's campaign manager, Dan Davis, who called Frank's statements "very clever," said yesterday he believes his candidate, who supports almost all of the presidents' stands, can pick up a significant number of votes by riding Reagan's "coat tails," while Frank countered that "Massachusetts has never been a coat tail state" because voters here are extremely knowledgeable politically.

The two men are expected to square off face-to-face in a number of debates this month, with one session scheduled for Brookline on October 25.

Senior service jobs

Jewish Vocational Service, a non-sectarian agency, is interviewing all persons 60 and over who are interested in looking for work, either part-time or full-time, in many different occupations.

The ESP Program is partially funded by West Suburban Elder Services which includes the communities of Brookline, Belmont, Needham, Newton, Waltham, Watertown, Wellesley and Weston. Appointments will be held at each local Council on Aging office.

Those interested are invited to contact the local office to schedule an interview with a JVS job developer who will attempt to place applicants in jobs.

School Comm. charges mayor with meddling teachers. Some of the committee members say, 'Wait and see.' He tells us we'll eat every penny, he'll cut our budget and we'll have to raise the pupil/teacher ratio. He says we cannot come to him for the money, that we'll have to get it out of the school system somewhere. He acts as if there's only one solution."

Both Nielsen and Silbey added that Mann's threats have no legal basis and that the committee will simply have to work around them.

"He's flailing in the dark. This makes things unpleasant, but we're going to ignore him," Silbey said.

"He has a hard time accepting the fact that the School Committee has the right to make decisions and not what he personally thinks is best. It's a power struggle," Nielsen added.

Mayor Mann says the meeting he held was "perfectly in order" and is not unlike other meetings he holds from time to time with staff members, department heads and elected officials.

As far as he is concerned, there is no conflict between himself and the committee of which he is an ex-officio member, but only "discussion. This was an information gathering kind of thing," Mann said in an telephone interview Tuesday morning. "It is one of goodwill. This process is no different from other negotiations. The finance report (recently released by the Community Advisory Committee on Long-Range Financial Planning) is sending some very important signals to all of us. We have had many meetings to determine collectively what our financial future is."

Mann also insists his and the city's involvement in the committee-controlled process is strictly within legal limitations.

"I cannot interfere," Mann said. "The School Committee has the right to settle the contract within their budget. The way they spend their money is solely within the province of the School Committee."

Aldermanic Finance Committee Chairman Paul E. Coletti, also present at Friday's meeting, said the mayor's meeting was used to address all aspects of teacher negotiations and the constraints involved.

"The problem is the second year (of the contract). The city's budget only allows for 2½ percent growth in everything; including most salaries. Obviously, this is not acceptable to the union."

> 'He's flailing in the dark. This makes things unpleasant, but we're going to ignore him.'
> Susan Silbey

However, Coletti noted that as FinCom chairman, he "would not look favorably on an overspending policy this year." He said he is "adamant that the school department remains within its budget" and that there will be no "bailing (them) out" like last year when aldermen and the mayor agreed to fund the School Committee's budget request, even though it was $400,000 over budget limits set by Mann.

Coletti described the atmosphere of the meeting as "one of mutual cooperation" and said "a lot of knowledge was transferred. This kind of cooperation is necessary in order to make the city work better," Coletti said.

School Committee Chairman Leonard Gentile said of the alleged rift between the mayor and members of the committee, "He's not pleased with some of the numbers we're talking about. I understand that. He's got the whole city to worry about."

Regarding the status of talks with the teachers, Gentile added, "He (the mayor) is not all that thrilled about it. But we've got a contract to settle."

Mayor mum on taxes

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON -- Contrary to the statements of some aldermen, Mayor Theodore D. Mann says he has not made a decision about whether he would veto a move lowering the tax burden on the city's commercial properties.

In a phone interview last week, Mann said he "may or may not accept" a possible decision by aldermen that would mean a substantially lower commercial tax rate and higher than expected rates for residents.

The mayor also said he received a morning phone call from one alderman, whom he would not identify, informing him that he or she would change their vote in favor of a lower commercial burden to one against such a reduction.

Mann's response came less than 24 hours after the Board of Aldermen voted 9-6 to reduce the commercial tax burden here, set for the last three years at 150 percent - the highest allowable, by 10 percent.

During debate prior to the vote, Alderman Robert L. Tennant, one of Mann's closest friends and a staunch advocate of the proposed reduction, rose to tell his colleagues, "The mayor is fully in favor of 150 percent and would veto anything else." Others later confirmed Tennant's belief.

Mann said last week, "My position is that setting the tax burden is the aldermen's perogative. I may or may not accept their decision...After they vote, I'll know better what to do. If I feel their decision is not in the best interest of the city, I have the right to veto it."

"Whatever the board decides, I will either sign it, not sign it or veto it. I can promise you that," he added.

If the majority vote in favor of a 140 percent commercial tax burden can be sustained at this Wednesday night's session, 25,000 residents can expect tax bills averaging at least $50 more than if the current 150 percent burden were allowed to continue. About 1,500 commercial property owners, many of whom do not live in the city, would probably see substantial decreases in their tax bills.

Of the nine aldermen absent from last week's meeting, three - Aldermen Richard Bullwinkle, Cynthia Creem and Carol Robinson - called City Clerk Edward English to say they were too sick to attend.

Mayor Mann also revived his criticism of aldermanic delays in deciding the tax burden issue and setting new tax rates, saying aldermen "could have taken action two weeks ago."

In September, aldermen postponed a public hearing on the tax burden for two weeks in an effort to encourage more citizen participation in the process. Last week's session saw five businessmen, many of them regulars at such hearings, rise to repeat their previously expressed and long-standing opinions that unless the commercial tax burden is decreased, many businesses will be driven out of the city.

No one spoke either for or against any change in the residential tax burden or tax rate.

not have had to borrow. Even if they had made a decision last Thursday night, the city "probably would have squeaked through" without the need for a loan, he added.

Fiscal 1985 tax bills are usually in the mail by October 1.

After knowing for almost a full month that a tax burden decision was due, aldermen at the September 17 session set a later than expected public hearing date to allow more thorough notification of residents. Last Thursday, after hearing public testimony from the only six businessmen attending the session, the 15 aldermen present first voted narrowly to substantially reduce the commercial tax rate, but then recessed the meeting until tomorrow night because nine aldermen were absent.

Unexpected delays in deciding the fiscal year 1984 tax burden six months ago forced City Treasurer Theodore L. Scafidi to borrow $15 million for 35 days to keep the city running.

According to Stiglich, if a tax burden, also called "classification," decision is made this week, bills will be in the mail by this weekend or early next week and "not more than $7 million" will be needed to cover the city's regular payroll and operating costs.

By next spring, the city will have collected close to $80 million in tax revenues, with about $40 million being brought in during the two billing periods. However, Stiglich said, the rate of tax payment is "slower at the beginning" of the billing process and "the heavy stuff comes in right at the end."

If bills had been mailed on the usual October 1 schedule, taxes collected would have totalled about $1.1 million the first week, $1.2 the second week and about $3.1 million by the third week of the 30-day payment period.

Once collected, tax revenues earn an estimated daily interest of $278 for every $1 million in city hands, Stiglich said. However, two weeks of potential interest has now been lost because of the various delays, creating about a loss of about $5,000.

The city's AAA bond-rating helped Scafidi receive an average interest rate of about 5.14 percent when he sought a $15 million loan to cover anticipated tax revenues earlier this year.

Assuming the city receives a 5.5 percent average interest rate on the currently planned 35-day, $7 million loan, Stiglich said the city will have to pay interest amounting to about $37,000, in addition to full repayment of the loan.

Newton Centre

Heart of the Garden City's civic life

By Suzanne M. Dulude
Asst. News Editor

For all of Newton's varied past, its religious, social and political centers have always been at the city's heart — appropriately named Newton Centre.

Life in Newton Centre began as it did in much of the city's villages, yet the character of the Centre was quickly established by its logistics. Stategically situated nearest the center of the collection of villages that has always made up the city, Newton Centre quickly became home to the first meeting house, cemetery, and later was host to the First Church of the Congregationalists, the First Baptist Church and the Newton Theological Institution.

But unlike the semi-rural village character that distinguished so many of the other areas of the city, Newton Centre's life was one devoted to the betterment of the Newton as a whole. Over its three and a half centuries of existence, this character has remained.

Former Alderman Ethel Sheehan called this selfless devotion to the city as a whole "regionalization," which she contrasted with the "village cohesiveness" that has persisted in other parts of the city. "That's what the tradeoffs are," she commented. "You're giving up a sense of village identity ... to cater to a larger population."

Yet such behavior is nothing new to the city's first political center, where the men of the town came to the meeting house, in the 17th century, to decide the Garden City's fate.

In Henry Rowe's "Tercentenary History of Newton," he writes that "Newton Centre was the most important village on the south side (in the late 19th century), with a population of 2,180."

The railroad, which came through the area in the late 19th century, affected the Centre much as it had the other villages, spurring growth and providing Newton with valuable access to Boston and the western portion of the state.

During that time, Mellen Bray built Bray's Block, a large brick building on Beacon Street near the railroad station, which provided assembly halls and places for dances, concerts and other forms of entertainment for the village. This construction "vastly improved the appearance of the village center," according to Rowe's account.

Not only was Bray's Block located in the physical center of the city, but many public facilities were being concentrated there also. The first town meeting house was constructed in Newton Centre in 1721, with the "school near the meeting house" being built sometime soon after. Yet bitter arguments from residents in the western sector of the city caused the town hall to move to West Newton in 1848. The center of government returned to Newton Centre in 1932, when City Hall was built at the corner of Walnut and Homer Streets as a WPA project.

But even while the city's governmental nucleus moved across town, Newton Centre was still rich in citywide resources. Crystal Lake has historically benefitted all members of the city as an almost rural recreation facility with easy access and a strategic location. Along those same lines, the Newton Centre Playground was an early recreational asset.

Some traditions that originated in Newton Centre and have survived the trials of time, according to Jackson Homestead Director Duscha Scott, included the Harvest Fair and the Farmers' Market. These provided a valuable outlet for townspeople to socialize, and gather at the Garden City's core.

Even though many of these traditions have continued, present-day Newton Centre lacks that village cohesiveness, according to resident Sheehan. Having moved from West Newton in 1959, Sheehan said one of the first things she noticed was that she "didn't feel the village spirit" she had felt in West Newton. She attributed part of this to what she called "a loss of control" by the residents over their village. The village's character as "a regional shopping center," as she referred to it, has taken away from that sense of cohesiveness.

Thought of the future of Newton Centre — "That's what terrifies me," Sheehan said. "Is it going to be cluttered with the same kind of stores (gourmet and speciality shops)?" she asked. "Are they going to be able to fill all the office space?" And worst of all, "What are they going to do about the parking and traffic problems?"

In the tradeoff between maintaining village cohesiveness and providing resources for the entire region, Sheehan said she feels the residents have lost. "The residents have lost their clout, their influence," she commented.

The present alderman for the area, Dominic Taglienti, feels a little more optimistic about Newton Centre. Granted, Taglienti admits, "It's not what it used to be," but he, nevertheless, feels there are "spotty pockets" of the village life that remain.

Whatever its ultimate fate, the city's center will continue to offer residents and visitors alike a measure of hospitality that was utterly unavailable slightly more than 100 years ago, when Charles Dickens came to town, decried the lack of amenities and spent his short visit sitting on a doorstep eating oranges.

(Next week, the city's other home of town hall will be explored, West Newton.)

Did you know that ...

•the first attempt at a day care center for the children of working mothers was made in Newton Centre in 1903 and during its first year of operation cared for 2,307 children?

•"America" ("My Country 'Tis of Thee") was written by a Newton resident? The Rev. Samuel Francis Smith, who lived in Newton Centre to the age of 87, was a Baptist minister and poet. In addition to "America," written in 1832, he wrote Newton's first extensive history and was in demand on most public occasions as a speaker.

'T-ville:' A village within a village

Thompsonville.

Many people may not where it is, but former Alderman Ethyl Sheehan is assured that it still has life.

"It's a village within a village. Thompsonville is a cohesive, caring community that has maintained its separate identity," the Newton Centre resident said.

In "The Tercentenary History of Newton" written by Henry Rowe in 1930, that quiet area is referred to as "the Thompsonville section of Newton Centre." Other references said it was a "hamlet (that) was named after a hermit who lived in the woods, and was inhabited by a number of families, most of whom were Germans."

Later the ethnic influx continued as "the Irish and then the Italians took their place. The houses were on Langley Road and connecting lanes," Rowe continued.

Life in the village was alive, as Rowe explained: "It was confidently believed that a community spirit was possible through the children, and social gatherings were held among them and friendly talks and instructive lectures for the elders."

Sixty-seven-year "T-ville" resident Dominic Taglienti attests that the village spirit remains. "We have very good participation in the village. I just walk down the street and people come out and talk to me," Alderman Taglienti said.

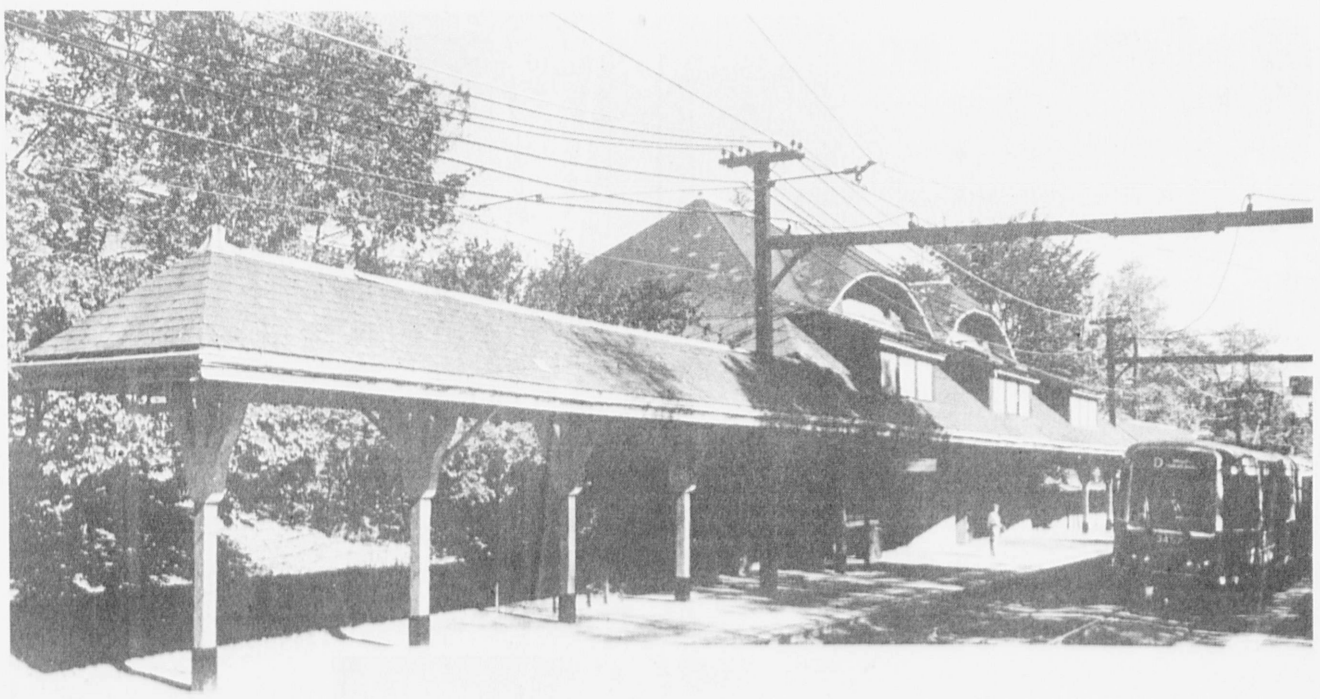

It seems that such community involvement has always been a part of Thompsonville. As stated by Rowe, "By 1920, the men of Thompsonville, with a real group consciousness and a feeling that they could themselves promote civic prosperity and aid one another on occasion, banded together as a club." Loyal to the spirit of their native Italy, the members of the club named it the Gabriele d'Annunzio Club.

It is with this spirit that Taglienti characterizes T-ville by saying, "There's a strong commitment here. If somebody hollers, everybody is there to help."

But he fears this feeling may not last. He fondly recalled the days when he could walk down Jackson Street and see the apple trees and the unpaved roads off to the left. "You hate to loose all that ... As you loose that, you loose a little a bit of your life."

His feeling about the villages in the city is that "the big ones are gobbling up the small ones" — a situation he thinks will eventually cause Thompsonville to become part of Chestnut Hill.

But until then, the T-ville native is happy in his hamlet with his wife who was born in the house across the street from his, a week after he was, just one of the residents who was born there, educated there and still lives there, happy in T-ville.

BC dedicates O'Neill Library

CHESTNUT HILL — On Sunday, Oct. 14, Boston College will hold ceremonies celebrating the dedication and official opening of its new, $28-million central research facility, the Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr. Library.

During last November the five-story structure was named in honor of university's alumnus, Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr., a 1936 graduate of Boston College.

Speaker O'Neill will address invited guests at the outdoor ceremonies, to be held on the library plaza, and will be feted at a dinner later that evening on campus.

Ernest L. Boyer, president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, will deliver the keynote address. Boyer is a past U.S. Commissioner of Education and chancellor of the State University at New York.

The new building, with the capacity to house 1.25 million volumes, replaces Bapst Library as the university's main library. Bapst was completed in 1928 to serve the needs of 1,200 commuter students and to house approximately 300,000 volumes. As one of six branches in the library system that served the university until this past summer, Bapst housed 700,000 volumes in 1983-84.

The O'Neill Library is the largest structure on campus, with some 203,000 gross square feet of space spread over five levels. The building has the capacity to house one million volumes, which can be expanded by another quarter of a million. There are 1,150 seats, which also could be expanded to 1,350.

The library combines the functions previously contained in the Bapst, Management, Science, and Nursing Libraries. This summer, the firm of William B. Meyer, Inc. of Stratford, Conn., completed the move of approximately 700,000 volumes, or 13 miles of books, into O'Neill.

In addition to providing traditional library services, O'Neill Library contains a media services department with a variety of non-print materials such as video tapes and discs, audio tapes and cassettes, phonograph records, filmstrips and slides; a library photocopy center; and a vision resources room to aid the blind or limited vision patrons in using library materials.

Additionally, the building houses the university Computer Center, a 140-station public computer terminal area, nine classrooms, research office space, and the university Telecommunications Center.

The library will service students constituting the largest full-time enrollment (about 11,000) of any Catholic college or university in the country; a total enrollment of approximately 14,000 undergraduate, graduate, and professional students; and a faculty of more than 700 members.

The O'Neill Library was designed by The Architects Collaborative, Inc. of Cambridge, and Richard White Sons, Inc., of Auburndale served as construction management. Co-principals from TAC were Royston T. Daley and John C. Harkness; project architect was John Weigel; and the supervising engineer was Thomas Murphy. Kevin Hines of Richard White Sons was project manager.

Fingerprinting schedule set

The Newton Police Fall Fingerprinting Program will continue through October, according to Chief William F. Quinn. The program will be conducted in conjunction with the Newton Crime Prevention Commission's Auxiliary office. They will travel with the Crime Prevention Van to various areas of the city through the end of October. Chief Quinn emphasizes that the Crime Prevention Van, in addition to fingerprinting children, offers a resource of information to all home owners and Newton residents on such pertinent issues as home security, personal protection, child passenger safety, locking devices, and alcohol education.

The van is expected to make stops from 7:15 to 9 p.m. at the following locations, weather permitting:

Oct. 10, Auburndale Star Market; Oct. 15, Star Market Newtonville; Oct. 16, Purity Supreme Washington Street, Newtonville; Oct. 17, Newton Center Municipal Lot; Oct. 22, Stop & Shop, Route #9; Oct. 23, Purity Supreme, Route #9; Oct. 24, Star Market, Auburndale.

Crocetti to be honored with testimonial dinner

NEWTON — On Thursday, Oct. 18, the friends of Samuel Crocetti are having a Testimonial Dinner Dance to honor his 28 years of dedicated service as executive director of the Newton Boys' Club.

The festivities will take place at the American Legion Post 440, California Street, Newton, beginning at 7:30 p.m.

NSO begins season under new leader

The Newton Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Music Director Ronald Knudsen, announces its plans for its 19th concert season as subscriptions for the four-concert series go on sale to the general public.

The NSO concert series will be highlighted by performances of world-renowned soloists, including the Boston Symphony Orchestra Principal Horn, Charles Kavalovski, pianist Andre-Michel Schub, violinist Robert Davidovici, and mezzo-soprano D'Anna Fortunato. They will perform with the orchestra at Sunday evening concerts at 8 p.m. on Nov. 11, Jan. 27, March 17, and May 12.

This season, the NSO moves to a new concert hall and location at Aquinas Junior College on Walnut Park (near the Jackson Homestead) off of Washington Street near Newton Corner. The handsome 850-seat hall is known to be "acoustically pure" and sought after by many music groups for recording purposes and performances. The ample parking and reception area will also be welcomed by NSO concert-goers.

The orchestra will open its season by musically inaugurating its new home with the performance of Beethoven's Consecration of the House Overture.

The orchestra will participate in the international celebration of the Bach/Handel Tricentennial by the performances of the Bach Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 and arias from Handel's opera Alcina during the concert season. Other musical highlights of the year include an all-Beethoven program in January, the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto in March, and Mahler's Songs of a Wayfarer in May.

The NSO has subscriptions available as well as single tickets for individual concerts. Subscriptions are $30 each, and single concert tickets are $8. For information and reservations call 965-2555 or 332-7495.

Photographers' exhibit to show diversity in art

NEWTONVILLE — "Five Boston Photographers," a photography show featuring the work of Lee Lockwood, Daniel Ranalli, Karin Rosenthal, Irene Shwachman, and Kalman Zabarsky, will open on Friday, Oct. 12, at the Newton Arts Center, 61 Washington Park, in Newtonville.

These five well-known area photographers will present the viewer with a representative sampling of their work. Each has a unique personal perspective and strong sense of artistic direction. Their work is highly diverse, ranging from the photojournalism of Lee Lockwood to the photograms of Daniel Ranalli.

The diversity of their backgrounds is illustrated in their work. Kalman Zabarsky received his undergraduate training in painting and in the process of recording his work with a camera moved into the field of photography, bringing with him the discipline of the painter and the painter's eye for form, content, and spatial relationships.

Coming from an entirely different set of experiences, Irene Shwachman began her career as a professional photographer at the age of 36 after her three children were born and she had worked briefly in the threatre. Through her long career, she has photographed a variety of images from interiors to a nine-year documentation of the city of Boston.

Karin Rosenthal has photographed the human figure since 1975. A portion of the work she is exhibiting at the Arts Center uses the figure in its abstract form, with light and dark, to create a photographic essay in movement and form.

Five Boston Photographers will have an opening reception at the Newton Arts Center on Friday, Oct. 12, from 6 to 9 p.m. to which the public is invited free of charge. The show will run through Monday, Nov. 5. The gallery hours are Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Sundays from 2 to 4 p.m.

Proceeds from tag sale to go to Voter Freeze

A tag sale that is "different," one which features works of art, plants, crafts, and delicious homemade food (plus all the usual household items), is being planned by a group of Newtonites who have pledged the proceeds to support the Voter Freeze '84 organization.

Rain or shine, the event will be held on Saturday, Oct. 13, at 9 Exmoor St., Newton Centre.

As a special attraction, local artist Alice Aronow is producing a limited edition of her multicolor silk screen print, "Paper Cranes Over Hiroshima," for the sale. The six-color print was inspired by the real life story of a Japanese girl whose tale is told in a book for children, Sadako and the Thousand Paper Cranes, by Eleanor Coerr.

Readings from the book will be presented at the tag sale along with demonstrations and instruction in Origami, the ancient Japanese art of paper folding, so that participants can learn how to create their own graceful and symbolic paper cranes.

"The Origami workshop is planned especially for children," explained Aronow, "but we feel that the story and demonstration will have meaning for everyone. This tag sale is not only to raise funds for Voter Freeze '84 but to remind us that the tragedy of Hiroshima must never happen again."

Contributions for the sale are eagerly requested. For further information please call 244-8457 or 969-9417.

Sheryl L. Davies becomes bride of Dennis Arsenault

Sheryl Lee Davies, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert L. Davies, of North Easton, was recently married to Dennis Paul Arsenault, son of Mr. and Mrs. Francis Arsenault of Waltham in an Aug. 25 ceremony held at the Holy Trinity Lutheran Church in North Easton, officiated by Rev. Charles Moline.

The bride wore a white silk chiffon with high neck and long puff to narrow sleeves and chapel length train, trimmed with lace. The bodice was lace and seed pearls on English net and silk chiffon. Topping of the dress was a silk illusion veil arranged, from a bridal wreath with streamers, which extended to the bottom of the train.

Present as matron of honor was Jennifer Davies Chapman, who wore a lilac tea-length gown over organza, accented with white alencon lace and a high Victorian neck.

Also in attendance as bridesmaids were Donna Anderson of Troy, Idaho, Sarah E. Jackson of Attleboro, Carol Arsenault Kusmerek of Waltham, and Lori J. Mullin of West Newton.

Best man to the bridegroom was Arthur DiGiovine of Marlboro. Ushers were James P. Arsenault of Stoneham, John M. Arsenault of Waltham, Russell M. Chapman of South Easton, and James Kusmirek of Waltham.

The bride and bridegroom are graduates of Bentley College. The bride is employed as a systems analyst with the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., and the groom is a programmer/analyst for Wang Laboratories. Both are enrolled in the masters program in computer science at Bentley.

Following a honeymoon trip to the Greek Islands, the couple will reside in West Newton.

Wolfpack repels Lions, 24-22

By Mike Stoller
Sports Correspondent

NEWTON — In a grueling Dual County League contest that had all the ingredients of a high school football classic, Boston Latin used a solid fourth-quarter defensive effort to hold off Newton South, 24-22, on Friday afternoon, handing the Lions their first loss of the season.

Although the Lions were unable to hold a 14-0 halftime lead, they still had several opportunities to win the game.

Trailing 24-20 late in the fourth quarter, Newton's Darvell Huffman made a clutch play, picking off a Latin pass at his own 30 and running it back 43 yards to the Wolfpack 27. South then marched to the Latin 13 using its ground game effectively. After that, however, two crucial turnovers and a disputed call by the official spelled doom for the Lions.

South running back Kevin Rollins hadn't fumbled in over three games, but Latin's Carl Morton promptly ruined that streak, stripping him of the ball at the four, and taking all the wind out of the Lion attack.

The Wolfpack took over deep in their own territory. On a fourth-and-six situation from the nine, quarterback Shawn Kennedy dropped back in his end zone and appeared to be taking a safety so that his team could gain a free kick and put South in its own territory. The controversial call resulted.

Kennedy scrambled around too long in the end zone (perhaps trying to waste time) and when the Lions finally got to him, they recovered what they thought was a fumble. The official, however, said Kennedy's arm was in motion to throw a forward pass and ruled intentional grounding, giving South only a safety instead of a touchdown.

All hope wasn't lost until Latin's Willie Nealy intercepted a Steve Altman pass on what was to be South's last play of the game.

The Lions, however, had things pretty much in control until the third quarter, combining a strong passing game with a powerful running attack.

South got off to a flying start in the first period. From their own 28, Rollins and Huffman did the bulk of the work, gaining an aggregate 45 yards. Then Altman hit wide reciever Kevin Houlihan for a 27-yard touchdown pass that capped a 72-yard drive. Houlihan caught the ball at the 19 before racing past the defense into the end zone. Altman's conversion attempt was successful and the Lions led, 8-0.

Soon after, Lion Jim Yerardi made a heads up play when he recovered a fumble on the Wolfpack 35. Two plays later, Altman spotted Huffman at the 25 before the latter zoomed across the goal line on his blazing speed. The conversion failed, but Newton had a 14-0 advantage.

After neither team scored in the second period, South had what appeared to be a secure lead. The Wolfpack showed no signs of threatening, gaining only one first down to South's 10 in the first half. The tide, however, turned in the third quarter when Latin coach Paul Costello switched his strategy.

"They stopped our running game," said Costello. "But we can throw the ball very well. That's what brought us back into it."

Costello couldn't have been more correct. From the Latin 26, Kennedy teamed up with Pat Pearce and Carl Morton for 21 and 10-yard gains respectively to open up the third period. Then John Cunningham ran 43 yards up the middle on a well-executed draw play that caught the South defense off guard. Latin made the conversion and the score was 14-8.

It was only two posessions later when Kennedy showed his great ability to throw the long ball. After hooking up with Morton for 18 yards on two plays, the Latin signal caller threw a perfect strike to Nealy, who was wide open on the right side for a 27-yard touchdown pass that capped a 45-yard drive. The Wolfpack made its second conversion and suddenly South trailed, 16-14.

Latin expanded the lead on its next drive when Kennedy connected with Morton once again, this time for a 35-yard TD toss. Morton made the catch at the 20 before eluding several tacklers and finding his way into the end zone. Kennedy hit Cunningham on the conversion and Latin led, 24-14, at the end of the third quarter.

"I was pleased with the comeback," said Costello. "It's tough for high school kids to come back and they did."

Lion coach Art Kojoyian summed it up best when he said his team had "no rush or pass defense" during the Latin third-quarter offensive surge.

Just how awesome was Latin's aerial attack? Kennedy was 14 of 22 for a whopping 185 yards, including two touchdowns on the afternoon. His outstanding receivers, Nealy and Morton, could be found open throughout the game. The former made six receptions good for 72 yards, including a touchdown, while the made seven catches for 92 yards, including a touchdown.

"We usually have a balance between our two wide recievers," said Costello, referring to Nealy and Morton. "The last game one had six catches and the other five."

The excitement continued in a "rock'em sock'em" battle that left several players on both sides well bruised after the game.

South took advantage of a break in the fourth quarter when Dave Castle made a fine defensive play, pouncing on a loose ball at the Latin 25.

A personal foul on the Wolfpack gave South 10 more yards. Two plays later, Altman hit Leroy Rollins (three receptions for 31 yards, including a touchdown) for a nine-yard touchdown pass. The conversion failed, but South was back in business.

Huffman's clutch interception put the Lions in striking distance and the Newton crowd started to taste possible victory.

But it just wasn't to be. In four weeks of play (this game included), Kevin Rollins was perfect, carrying the ball 81 times for 466 yards without a fumble. His first one, however, came at a crucial time and place: late in the fourth quarter at the Latin four. Morton knocked the ball out of Rollins' arm, and the Wolfpack took over deep in their own territory.

After Latin took the controversial safety, the Lions had one more solid opportunity. With well over a minute left, Huffman made an excellent 17-yard kick return. On the first play, however, Altman's 29-pass bomb was picked off by Nealy. The Wolfpack offense ran out the clock, and South had lost a heartbreaker, 24-22.

Kojoyian reflected on the game later.

"We played a very good ball club," said the coach. "You can't have turnovers."

Meanwhile Costello said he was very pleased with his defensive players. After all, it was they who forced the Lion turnovers when they needed them most.

"They wanted to hold (the Lions) all day and they did the job," said Costello. "We've had some wars with them. Last year we tied them 22-22 and the year before they beat us."

The Lions (3-1, 0-1 in the league) will try to get back on the winning track when they play another DCL contest at Concord-Carlisle Saturday at 1:30 p.m.

All eyes are on Texas

NEW YORK (UPI) — With the No. 1 ranking at stake, there is no question that all eyes will be on Texas next week.

Texas, which held onto its No. 1 rating Monday for the second week after trouncing Rice 38-13, will meet No. 2 Oklahoma Saturday in the Cotton Bowl in the annual meeting between the two interstate rivals.

The Longhorns received 34 of 39 first-place votes and 579 points.

Oklahoma was idle last week, but moved from third to second after previously second-ranked Ohio State was upset by Purdue. Oklahoma received one first-place vote and 518 points.

It will be the first time the two top-ranked teams have met since the Jan. 1, 1983 Sugar Bowl between No. 1 Georgia and No. 2 Penn State.

"(Oklahoma) means a lot," Texas tailback Terry Orr said. "They're our next opponent and that's always the most important. But No. 1 against No. 2 ... it'll be the biggest game of everyone's career."

No. 3 Washington and No. 4 Boston College also received first-place votes. Washington moved up from fourth, getting three votes for No. 1 and 487 points. Boston College, fifth last week, got the other first-place vote and 459 points. Brigham Young rounds out the top five with 429 points.

Campbell's 29 triggers North upset

NEWTON — Junior Jim Campbell shot a 29 over nine holes at the Brae Burn Country Club to lead his Tiger golf team to a 5-4 upset of Brockton.

"The kids just played unbelievable," said coach Jerry Phillips, who saw Campbell and Rick DeSimone capture three points out of four in their twosome.

Campbell birdied the first four holes and finished with a birdie on the ninth. Dan Nardone played with Kevin Toomey and the pair combined for two points. Nardone sank a 15-foot putt on the last hole and win his match and four ball for two points.

Nardone hit his tee shot in the trap, but hit a beautiful shot to set up his putt.

Phillips credited his seventh through 12th players with pushing the starters ahead in practice. This was the first loss for Brockton, while Newton North is now 5-2.

Appel and Bogie tourney winners at Ponkapoag

NEWTON — Hilda Appel and Renne Bogie scored a net 30 to win the final weekly golf tournament of the Ladies Inner Club members at Ponkapoag.

Tied for second place were the teams of Edna Tenney-Ruth Zaleski and Mary Michales-Nora Lyons, each of whom scored 34.

In third place was the team of Sally Barr and Bertha Sigilman with a net 35.

The annual award dinner will be held at the Blue Hills Country Club on Oct. 16. Member reservations should be made with Pat Fitzgerald no later than Monday.

North posts 6th soccer triumph

NEWTON — Goals from four different players led Newton North to a 4-0 lead and the Tigers cruised to a 4-1 decision over North Quincy in Suburban League boys' soccer action on Monday.

Two goals in the first 15 minutes turned out to be plenty for the Tigers, who were never really threatened.

Eli Berg notched the first, after being set up by Don Natale. Berg went one-on-one with the North Quincy goalkeeper and fired home a low shot.

Five minutes later junior Brian Scales made it 2-0 when he made a nice play and put in a corner kick.

Goal number three came off the foot of Natale, who made a nice play after taking a pass from Scales 30 yards out. Natale dodged past two defenders before going in alone and banging the score in.

Phil Vasiliades finished the Newton North scoring, assisted by Ed O'Brien, with a 30-yarder that looped over the keeper's head.

The Red Raiders managed to avoid the shutout when Warren Palmer scored from a scramble in front with four minutes to play in the game.

"We started getting things together," said a pleased Tiger coach Roger Brown. "The passing game was better."

The coach singled out senior stopper Andy Shaver and senior sweeper Jim Donovan for their outstanding efforts.

The 6-2-1 Tigers are off on Wednesday, but have a big contest in Waltham on Friday.

Sometimes a good team plays just well enough to win. That was the case for Newton North on Thursday, as it took a 2-0 league decision from Brookline, despite a somewhat sub-par effort.

The teams played a scoreless first half, with Newton having the better chances, though playing against the win.

In the second half, the Tigers finally put some real pressure on the Brookline end and it paid off in a goal at 12:40. Striker Jeff Swett intercepted a weak Brookline clear and sent it over to Sean Fergus on the right side. Fergus crossed to center halfback Artie Aaron and the co-captain drilled home the gamewinner from 10 yards out on the left side.

The Tigers got some help from the visitors on the insurance goal. A Brookline fullback booted a clear high into the air. The ball kept drifting back with the wind, and by the time it came down, Phil Vasiliadis was challenging the Brookline goalie for the ball on the goalline. Instead of punching it away, the keeper grabbed the ball and came down, but unfortunately for him, he was behind the line and Newton had an easy goal.

Senior Dave Vento posted the shutout in the North net, making one sparkling save on a direct kick with two minutes left.

South volleyballers on upgrade despite loss

NEWTON — Coach Judy Kennedy sees a lot of improvement in the play of her Lions, but it wasn't enough as Newton South lost to Quincy, 2-0, on Friday in Dual County League volleyball. South did improve in the second game. After losing 15-3 in the first game, they were edged 15-9 in the second.

"We're working on a new system," said Kennedy. She is going to a less complicated system, and thinks it will help. "The stuff they did was much better," she said of Friday's contest.

Jenny Lerman and Kelley Norman played well as setters for the Lions, now 2-6. They are at Newton North on Wednesday.

Newton North spiked

"They were a more-experienced, technically sound team," summed up Newton North coach Jay Cradle after her Tigers fell to Boston Latin, 15-4, 15-4, on Monday. Cradle did praise the play of Tessa Forbes, Nancy Silverman and Beth Morahan for Newton North. Now 3-5 overall, the Tiges host Newton South on Wednesday.

Newton Catholic continues to roll

The Newton Catholic volleyball team now has sole possesion of first place in the Catholic Suburban League, with a 2-0 win over Cathedral on Thursday.

Now 7-0, the Lancers won the games with 15-11 and 17-15 scores.

In the second game, close throughout, Newton Catholic was led by Kerry MacDougall and Angela Bove. Judy Jackson also did some good bumping for the winners.

Newton Catholic has lost only one game this season, that coming in the first match of the season.

Next Thursday, the Lancers host Ursuline Academy.

Bolick leads Bentley to cross country title

The Bentley cross country team captured the Northeast-8 championships for the third straight year on Saturday at St. Anselm's by edging out Springfield by one point.

The Falcons finished with a score of 44 while Springfield totaled 45. Bryant College was a distant third at 103.

Ron Lombardi of Springfield ran a 26:26 over the 8,000 meter course, while Mike Aubin of Stonehill was just one second behind him.

The top Bentley finisher was Paul Bolick, who finished third in 26:46. Other Falcons in the top 10 were John Godin at eighth and Joe Nelson in 10th place.

The next competition for the harriers is in the Easterns on Oct. 20.

The women harriers finished third in the same championships, as Springfield repeated as champs with a score of 31. Bryant took second with 36 and Bentley earned its second straight third-place finish with a score of 75.

Diane Hanks of Springfield won the race in 18:44, nine seconds better than last year's champ, Stephanie Witt of Bryant.

Bentley earned the third spot by taking the 12 through 15 spots. Teresa Kitteridge, Jennifer Brining, Cindy Heflin and Maureen Donovan came in together in that pack.

The Falcons' next competition is in the Holy Cross Invitational on Saturday.

In soccer, Bentley lost a pair of games and had its five-game win streak snapped over the weekend.

Monday, the Falcons lost a tough 1-0 decision in overtime at Babson, while Saturday, they fell to Stonehill, 2-1, in a mild upset.

At Babson, Dan Caldicott scored out of a crowd 3:23 into the first overtime to give the home team a victory. Babson outshot Bentley, 17-10.

On Saturday, Tony Rey scored the only Falcon goal with 13:13 left in the game, but it wasn't enough to overcome a pair of Stonehill goals in the first half.

Newton teams defeated in field hockey

The Newton North girls' field hockey squad suffered a tough 1-0 defeat at the hands of Lincoln-Sudbury on Thursday at home. Tied at the half, L-S scored the only goal eight minutes into the second half. Newton North standouts included left link Tara Feeney and right link Stephanie Bower.

South downed

Finally, the Newton South Lions were beaten by Acton-Boxboro, 7-0 at home on Thursday. "The girls played an excellent game, and were more spirited than ever," said Coach Judy Kennedy.

It was another tough loss for the Newton South field hockey team on Tuesday, as the Lions fell to Wayland, 7-0, on a sloppy, muddy field.

"These are the most enthusiastic kids I've seen. They're a great bunch of girls," said South coach Susan Abende.

Red Raiders rush for 306 yards vs. Tigers

By Roy LeBlanc
Staff Writer

QUINCY – "They blocked better than us, ran better than us, and tackled better than us," said Newton North football coach Peter Capodilupo after his team had been defeated, 18-6, by North Quincy at Memorial Field on Sunday.

"We played poorly," the coach continued. "They did the things they had to do to win...The most disappointing part of the game was that we seemed to play without passion. We're not that good that we can do that."

While the Tigers were struggling through the contest, the Red Raiders were taking full advantage of the lackluster Newton effort. The chief beneficiaries were Steve Kelly and Mike Barry, who combined to account for 279 of Quincy's 306 rushing yards.

The Tigers did manage to pull it together for a brief stretch in the third quarter and make a game of it. They were lucky to trail by only 12 at the half after being totally outplayed. Newton managed only one first down before the intermission while the Raiders were racking up 11.

Things seemed to turn around a bit in the third, aided by three costly North Quincy penalties. After the teams traded possessions, the Tigers benefited from a 15-yarder when a Raider came down and belted Geoff Drew after a fair catch of a punt.

Three plays later another personal foul got the ball across midfield to the North Quincy 47, and suddenly the Tigers seemed alive. They put together a nice drive, including a 16-yard pass from Rusty Halloran to Chris Rutan that put the ball on the 10. Not content with the help they had already contributed, the Raiders were hit with another five-yard flag, and Newton had a first-and-goal from the five.

It took four plays, but the Tigers finally put it in on a nice pass from Halloran to Alex DeNucci on a roll-out. Halloran went left, so did DeNucci, and the quarterback just flipped it over the line to make it 12-6.

When the Raiders booted the ball away after four plays on the ensuing possession, the momentum seemed to have turned completely in Newton's favor. The Raiders looked tired, and Newton seemed fired.

The bubble burst in one play.

Drew took off on an eight-yard gallop but coughed the ball up at the end of it, and Dave Cooke was on the spot to come up with the fumble. (Cooke also picked off a pass later on.) That turnover seemed to completely deflate the Tigers, as Quincy took only six plays to cover 55 yards and put the game away. Kelly finished off the drive by going over the top from the one.

"The fumble hurt us," said Capodilupo, "but that's not why we lost the game."

The Tigers put one last drive together, but fittingly enough, Barry ended that threat when he stopped Halloran on fourth down at the North Quincy 28.

The first half just belonged to North Quincy. The first down difference accurately reflected the teams' play, as the Raiders ran 35 plays from scrimmage to Newton's 19.

The score might have been 18-0, but for one big play by Scott Hamblet, who stopped Kelly for a five-yard loss. Kelly was stopped behind the line only one other time all day.

That stop set up a passing situation that wound up in a Drew interception on the Newton North 20.

The other factor in keeping the game close was the punting game, which was perhaps the only Newton bright spot. Halloran and Rutan combined to average 37 yards on five punts, not giving the Raiders any cheap scores due to field position.

Newton's early troubles forced Capodilupo into some situations that he was trying to avoid.

"We planned to throw the ball more," said the coach. "They're a situation team. We had too many big mental errors."

Even Coach Ken McPhee of North Quincy admitted, "We expected more diverseness" from the Tigers.

"We didn't have the ball that much (and) didn't have much field position in the first half," pointed out Capodilupo.

"The killer touchdown was the last one," he added. "We finally came back and had the momentum. I felt we were going to march right down and win the game.

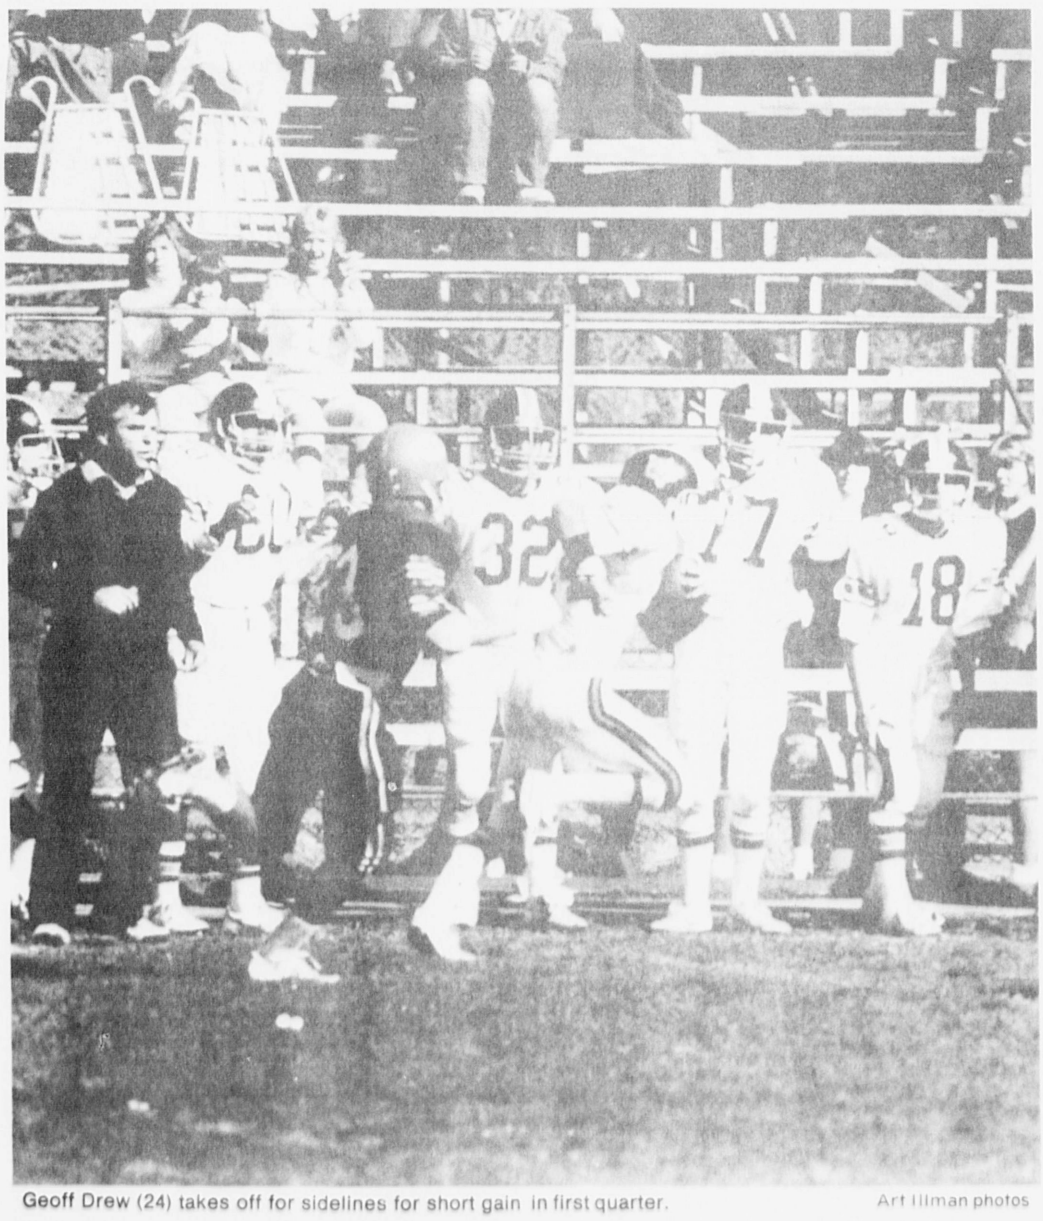

"I wasn't proud after this game. We have to work harder," the coach concluded.

The Tigers, now 1-3 overall and 1-2 in the Suburban League, will have to regroup quickly for this Saturday's contest, a 1:30 p.m. affair at Malden. That game was originally scheduled for Friday night, but was switched to the next day.

The home club is coming off a 34-0 shellacking of Quincy, getting two long touchdown runs from Reggie Hayes to lead the way.

Newton North girls remain perfect in soccer, 9-0 record

QUINCY — Jackie Kinsella netted a pair of goals to lead the undefeated Newton North Tigers to a 5-0 romp over North Quincy in Suburban League girls' soccer action on Monday. The win brings Barry Howland's squad to a perfect 9-0 mark.

Newton dominated this one, outshooting North Quincy, 40-4. Janet Burke headed in a corner kick by Carolyn Natale five minutes into the game for the winner.

At the 10-minute mark, Natale passed the ball to Kinsella, who knocked it home from the 18-yard line. Kinsella got an assist on the third goal, a pretty shot into the upper left corner by Ann Ming. With five minutes left in the first half, Cheryl Mack passed the ball to Kinsella, who put in another from just outside the penalty area, good for a 4-0 lead at half.

Howland played his subs during most of the second half, but got another score when Angie McKenna scored on a pass from Marilyn Schultz.

Liz Speliotis notched the shutout for the Tigers, who are off until Friday's showdown against once-beaten Waltham in Newton.

A balanced scoring attack led the Tigers to a 5-0 win Thursday over Brookline. Jackie Kinsella got the eventual winner with a blast from the 18-yard line. A pass from Carolyn Natale set up the goal, which came two minutes into the game. Five minutes later, Kristen Hughes took a pass from Kinsella, turned around, and blasted the ball into the upper right corner.

At the 10 minute mark, Tina Rosenthal took a pass from Abby Segal and put it over the goalie's head for a 3-0 lead. Rebecca Locke capped the first half scoring on a pass from Diane Toomey.

In the second half, Howland emptied his bench, and all 28 players got into the game. Segal got the final goal on a pass from Hughes.

Laura Yellen and Lisa Steliosis shared the goalkeeping duties for the Tigers.

On Wednesday, Newton pounded 50 shots on the Cambridge net, but came away with only a 2-0 victory. Angie McKenna headed in a cross from Rosenthal for the winner while Leah Walker scored the second goal on an assist from Hughes.

Co-captains Erin Toussaint and Meg Kane guided the Newton Country Day School Jayvees to a 3-0 victory over Brimmer and May. Alison Mosher and Nicole Deragon were the goal-scorers. Susan Daunca excelled in the net for Newton.

Sullivan 'assists' Newton Midgets

WATERTOWN – The Newton Midget A's are still undefeated and unscored upon following a 4-0 win over Watertown in Middlesex Youth Hockey League action on Saturday night.

Newton got on the board in the first period. At the 5:13 mark, Robbie Ingham snapped home a pass from Robbie Sullivan for a 1-0 lead. About five minutes later, Donny Vito put the puck home after Sullivan and Tim Burke swiped at it in front of the net.

For Sullivan, a left wing, it was his sixth assist in three games.

In the second period, Tim Burke carried down the right side and and shot into the short side for an unassisted goal. At 4:30 of the final period, Peter Kalamvokis put in a long rebound of an Anthony Whiting shot for the capper.

Greg Taylor had a good day between the posts for Newton, but wasn't tested too severly as his team outshot Watertown, 42-15.

Doug Leone and Ken Golden each netted a score as the Newton Pee Wee AA's downed Natick, 2-0, in recent Youth Hockey action.

Ben Weisbuch made a nice pass between a pair of defensemen for the assist on Leone's goal, while Michael Gannon set up Golden's score.

Peter Apuniss and Marc Cappello were in the nets for the shutout in the team's first game.

Area swimmers in European test

NEWTON – Two area swimmers have recently returned from a two-week European competition that included meets in Yugoslavia and Italy.

Ronda Appelbaum, 16, of Wiswall Road, Newton Centre, and Tim King, 16, of Fuller Street, West Newton, were part of a team joined by Olympic medalists George DiCarlo and Cynthia "Sippy" Woodhead.

The team competed against swimmers from Hungary, Yugoslavia, Saudi Arabia, and Italy. Competition was held Split, Rijeka, Crikvenica, and Belgrade, Yugoslavia as well as in Venice, Italy.

Although King made a strong showing, he was no match for some of the older, more experienced Europeans. "This was my first international competition," he said. "Next time, I'll know what to expect."

Appelbaum, who had a limited amount of international competition, fared somewhat better. Woodhead, one of the cornerstones of the U.S. Olympic team and Nadia Pentich, Yugoslavian national record holder in the 100 meter freestyle, were the only two competitors to out-touch Appelbaum in the competition.

A senior at Newton South High School, Appelbaum brought home seven second-place medals and one third-place medal, swimming both the 100 and 200 meter freestyle events.

Joseph W. Bernal, head coach of swimming at Harvard University and coach of Bernal's Gator Swim Club, defending champions of New England swimming, organized the European tour.

"We were particularly well received. The stands were packed, and everywhere we went, we noticed signs announcing the international swimming competition," said Bernal.

Man convicted on prescription charges

NEWTON -- A Waltham man will serve two months in jail after he was found guilty in Newton District Court of passing a phony prescription and larceny.

Paul Ryder, of 87 Adams St., was found guilty of uttering a forged instrument and larceny before being sentenced to concurrent eight month terms in the Billerica House of Correction.

Judge Monte G. Basbas suspended all but two months of the sentence and placed the defendant on one-year probation.

Ryder was also ordered to make restitution in the amount of $225 to the West Newton Savings Bank, the estimated cash value of payroll checks he stole there and forged.

Pleads innocent to disorderly conduct

NEWTON -- A 29-year-old Boston woman was arrested last week for disorderly conduct when she allegedly refused to cooperate with a police officer who asked for her car's registration, then fled when he called for a tow truck.

Desiree G. Zillmer, of 6 Blackwood St., pleaded innocent to the charge at her arraignment in Newton District Court. She is due back there Oct. 11 for a pre-trial conference.

Police said she was arrested at about 4:30 p.m. after a short chase that began when she pulled away from a police officer who stopped her 1979 Datsun 280ZX at the intersection of Boylston and Walnut Streets.

She allegedly fled when she could not produce a registration for her vehicle and before a tow truck arrived to remove her car from the street, police said.

She was again stopped on Woodcliff Road, where she was arrested for disorderly conduct after she allegedly refused to get out of her car, police said.

Cabbie takes bogus $20 bill

NEWTON -- A Newton cabdriver told police last week he was taken by a customer who paid his fare with a counterfeit $20 bill, police said.

The cabdriver, who was not identified by police, turned over a "poorly reproduced" copy of a $20 bill when he arrived at the station in the morning and related his story to authorities, a police spokeswoman said.

Police said the cabdriver picked up a fare last Monday at about 9:30 p.m. in front of a Cherry Street home and drove the suspect to the Dragon Chef Restaurant, at 679 Moody St., Waltham.

In return for the $2 fare, the suspect gave the cabbie the phony bill and received $18 in change. The cab's interior dome light was not operating at the time and the cabbie was not able to examine the bogus currency, police said.

The suspect was described as a mustached, white male with long, black hair, about five-feet, nine-inches tall, weighing 160 pounds, wearing dungarees and a dark jacket.

A 1981 Pontiac Firebird parked on Esty Farm Road caught fire at about 11:30 p.m. when a spark from the muffler ignited insulation inside the car's trunk, records show.

Mann declares Fire Prevention Week

NEWTON -- Mayor Theodore D.Mann has proclaimed the week of Oct.13, 1984, as " Fire Prevention Week" in the City of Newton. People must become aware of the fact that most fires start because of carelessness in ordinary,everyday situtations."only when people of all ages recongnize this and individuallly do something about it will the nation's fire toll be reduced significantly.

As it is now Chief Reilly reports that 5,920 Americans lost their lives in fire related incidents last year, involving 641,500 fires in homes alone, costing over three billion dollars in property loss.For decades, up untill 1957,the average death toll by fire throughout the United States was approximately 12,000 annually. Since that time, smoke detectors have been become more readily available on the market at an economical price.

Federal, state and local fire officials have continually emphasized the need for these early warning devices, especiallly during the hours that people are asleep. Since 1975,the fire death toll has been on a steady decline. Now, nine years later, that figure has been reduced by 50 percent.

A properly maintained smoke detector (batteries changed annually) located on each floor of the house is one of the best investments a person can make in order to protect his loved ones and his property.

Most fires are avoidable -- the real tragedy of this annual toll of fire, Chief Reilly points out, is that most of these disasters could be prevented. Start now now by making it a habit to always be careful with smoking materials and matches -- No.1 cause of of building fires; to properly maintain and use electrial appliances and all heating an cooking equipment; to take special precautions with open flames an sparks; to check and to observee safe procedures with flammable liquids and, last but not least,to install and properly maintain smoke detecters.

Everyone must help -- "The nation's fire loss record in terms of both lives and property can be substanially reduced", says the cheif. "If everyone seriously tries to develop fire-safe habits at home and on the job-if everone acts as if every week were Fire Prevention Week, we can," he concluded.

Brookline man found guilty in house thefts

By Gary Dorion
County News Service

CAMBRIDGE -- A Brookline man has been given a suspended prison term and probation after pleading guilty to breaking and entering into two Newton homes April 22, 1984 when he stole thousands of dollars worth of violins owned by a music teacher.

Superior Court Judge Walter Steele, sitting in Middlesex Superior Court, ordered Ralph H. Quaglia Jr., 21, of 126 Babcock St., on three years probation after meting out a suspended 10 year Concord State Prison term.

Judge Steele declined to except the recommendation of Assistant District Attorney Laurence Pierce that Quaglia actually served time in Concord Prison as opposed to getting a suspended term. Quaglia, who has no adult criminal record, also was ordered to seek alcohol and drug treatment.

According to Pierce, Quaglia was arrested by Newton Police shortly after the second break after the residents, who were home at the time, reported the break to police who arrested Quaglia based on information the residents gave them.

Pierce said police found the violins not too far away in some bushes near the point where the defendant was arrested. A pocketbook in Quaglia's possession led police to the scene of another break in the city earlier that evening, Pierce said. Quaglia received a second suspended Concord Prison term of ten years in connection with his pleading guilty to breaking and entering in the second incident.

Vicious dogs bite woman

By Eric Fehrnstrom
Staff Writer

NEWTON -- Two vicious canines held police at bay for more than an hour Thursday after they broke loose from inside a Sumner Street home, allegedly attacked a woman pedestrian and forced children playing outside the Mason-Rice School to flee inside, police said.

Police blocked off streets in the neighborhood until they were finally able to corral the dogs, which broke free at about 11:30 a.m. while a group of 40 elementary school children were outside for a PhysEd class.

The dogs -- a Doberman pinscher and Dalmatian -- were ordered removed from the city immediately following the incident, police said.

"These two dogs just don't interact with people," said John Geary, Newton's animal control officer. "They're not outside dogs. The only people they've ever had contact with are their owners."

Geary said the Doberman allegedly bit and wounded a Brookline woman who was standing in front of the Willow Street fire station.

"It wasn't a serious bite, but it was an open wound that required treatment," Geary said. The woman allegedly was bitten on her left thigh, records show.

When police arrived at the scene, the dogs were roaming the area near the Mason-Rice Elementary School and children outside were ordered back into the building, police said.

One of the officers was armed with a loaded tranquilizer gun, but the weapon was never used, police said.

"I was very impressed by the care the police gave to this potential crisis," said a relieved Clara Hicks, principal of Mason-Rice. "I felt very good about it."

Geary said the dogs' owners will voluntarily comply with the city's order to remove the canines from within city limits.

Former resident changes his plea on drug charges

By Gary Dorion
County News Service

CAMBRIDGE -- A former Newton man now living on Cape Cod was sentenced to a suspended term at the Billerica House of Correction after changing his plea to guilty on several drug charges.

Richard S. Bjerum, who lived at 7 Orris St., Newton at the time of the offenses July 1, 1983, recently pleaded guilty to possession of marijuana with intent to distribute, and to simple possession of cocaine, psilocybin, an hallucinogen, and to possession of diazepam.

A Superior Court judge sentenced Bjerum to a suspended term of two years in the house of correction, and ordered him to serve two years probation and to forfeit some $6800 confiscated by Newton Police when they raided his home.

According to Assistant District Attorney Laurence Pierce, Newton Police, acting on a search warrant, entered Bjerum's home and found small quantities of various drugs and a larger quantity of marijuana in the defendant's bedroom and in a study. Police also found the money in one of those areas. According to Pierce, the money allegedly was related to drug sales.

Pierce said a lengthy investigation which included surveillance of the defendant's home was conducted in the case prior to the exercise of the search warrant.

Charges of possession of cocaine with intent to distribute the drug and possession of methaqualone were dropped. Pierce said the defendant was ordered to seek drug treatment as a condition of probation.

A worthy cause

Newton residents Ruth Robertson and Mary McEnaney are joined by WBZ-TV4 Newsman Randy Price (center), and their "cabbage" they purchased at the Third Annual WBZ Farmstand to benefit the Children's Hospital Fund. Ruth and Mary were two of the hundreds of people who helped raise over $12,000 in five and a half hours.

YOUR OFFICIAL MASS. INSPECTION MAINTENANCE STATIONS

Now that your car is inspected just once a year, the last number on your plate determines when. If your plate ends in 9, get inspected in September. Zeros come in October, though, and plates with all letters in November.

We'll do the traditional safety checks as well as the new computerized tailpipe emissions test. Quickly and efficiently.

Travel briefs

WELLESLEY, Mass. (UPI) — Museum offerings in Massachusetts and Maine, a Fall festival in Vermont, a Connecticut county fair and New Hampshire's coastline all offer attractions for the weekend of Oct. 12-14, as recommended by the ALA Auto and Travel Club.

If you plan to be in the Boston area the weekend of Oct. 12-14, take advantage of museum-goers month. This year's theme is "Come To Your Senses," and 25 Boston area museums are participating in an array of offerings.

Exhibits, performaces, lectures, flims, children's shows, demonstrations and workshops are all being held through the end of the month in recognition of the Boston area's wealth of cultural resources.

—The Boston Children's Museum will provide dramatic selections from "Our Town," performed by the Wheelock Family Theatre, on Sunday, Oct. 14. Call (617) 426-6500.

PHOENIX (UPI) — When a major hotel chain opened a reservation center inside an Arizona prison for women and staffed it with inmates, some called it an experiment. Others called it mad.

Now that the center is celebrating its third anniversary, it is viewed as one of the nation's most successful prison industry programs, according to reports in Travel Agent Magazine.

Since 1981 the chain, Best Western International, has employed inmates at the Arizona Center for Women as reservationists to handle the overflow of phone calls for room reservations on its toll-free number.

Only inmates on "minimum-medium security sentences" and those without fraud on their records are eligible to attend the two-week prison training class.

Reservationists receive starting salary of $4.12 per hour, minus state, federal and FICA taxes and a 30 percent reduction for room and board. An additional 30 percent may be sent home to help support their families, in some cases enabling them to get off welfare. The remainder is held in reserve until the inmate's release.

Since its inception more than 110 inmates have worked for the hotel chain at the correctional facility and approximately 30 have been hired after their release.

The center has generated nearly $30 million in room reservations and handles approximately five percent of all U.S. calls.

The free admission is available on a first-come, first-admitted basis. However, there is no free parking.

Word junkie likes to shock world

By Geri Smith

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (UPI) -- Twenty people clutching scrawled poems and flowers huddle together against the winter chill and wait patiently for an old, blind man to finish his nap and acknowledge their presence.

A tear slides down the cheek of a middle-aged woman when a perplexed, blinking Jorge Luis Borges emerges on the arm of a friend to thank the crowd of would-be poets and admirers for this greeting on his 85th birthday.

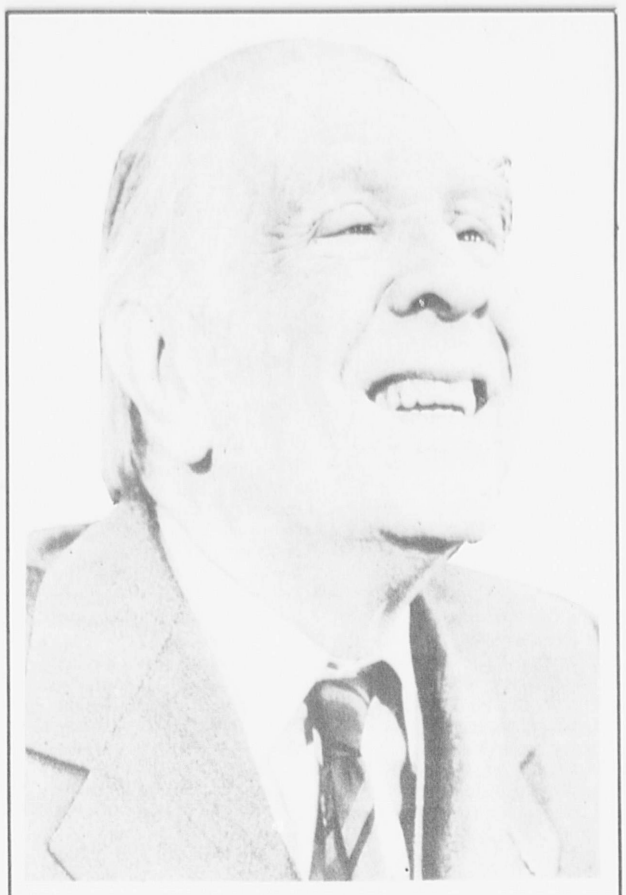

"I have loved you for 34 years," the woman tells Borges, arguably the best Spanish-language author alive.

In his modest downtown apartment a few days later, soaked in an afternoon sun that the long-blind writer cannot see but can feel on his shoulders, the author of "The Aleph" and "The Book of Sands" reflects on the sidewalk homage.

"I was taken aback. I was duly thankful, but at the same time rather amazed. Maybe on the next birthday they will have to meet in a church or in the cemetery, no?"

He tilts his head to sense whether his listener is shocked at his talk of death.

Borges has spent a lifetime trying to shock or at least unsettle his readers and listeners. He is also a word junkie — a man who consults a half-dozen etymological dictionaries before settling on the precise word he wants to use.

'An old man can hardly be inventive, can he?'

Jorge Luis Borges

"Have you ever tried cocaine or marijuana? Tell me, did it do anything to you? Did you have any hallucinations?" Borges peppers a visitor with questions, bursting with curiosity. "I tried marijuana and cocaine here and in Mexico some 30 years ago. I felt nothing whatsoever," he says with unconcealed disappointment. "I had a cold feeling in my nostrils and that was that.

"I was rather garrulous, though. I went on talking and talking. What I said was very trivial.

"In all, the drugs were nothing to write home about -- I decided to stick to mints." Later he says, "I tried whiskey once or twice and thought it was awful.

"I would like to try opium sometime, though, at least to honor De Quincy."

Borges' curiosity is unflagging, whether it concerns drugs, spiritual experiences or life after death. A close friend calls him "a hippie in a suit," a "tireless experimenter."

On a visit to California a few years ago, Borges, then in his early 80s, took a ride in a hot air balloon and called it an "unforgettable experience."

"Up above we saw the sun rise over Napa Valley, we felt the winds in our faces," he recalled afterwards. "The wind carried us and did what it wanted with us. It was a sensation of traveling not only in space, but in time — it felt like the 19th century."

Time. The concept appears whenever Borges speaks or writes.

Literature students the world over use the term "Borgean" to describe a literary device using many sub-plots. Interaction of the sub-plots is possible only if time is circular, continuous. The "circularity of time," it is called.

In "The Garden of the Forking Paths," one of Borges' most celebrated short stories, two men who share a solid friendship suddenly become enemies and one must kill the other. Why? Because, as the victim tells his remorseful friend-turned-killer, "time forks perpetually toward innumerable futures. In one of them I am your enemy."

Borges' complex works are not for everyone, and he does not know himself for whom he writes.

"I never thought about that. Maybe I write for some of my personal friends." He has only a handful of friends left.

His hands pass lovingly over the spines of valuable first editions and a 1911 set of Encyclopedia Brittanica. Borges looks more like an aging aristocrat than a writer of strange tales who is plagued by violent, recurring nightmares.

His everyday uniform is a crisp blue shirt, a navy blue suit and a sober blue-print tie, all laid out for him in the morning by his housekeeper, Fanny. She is the guardian of his privacy and has worked for the family for 29 years.

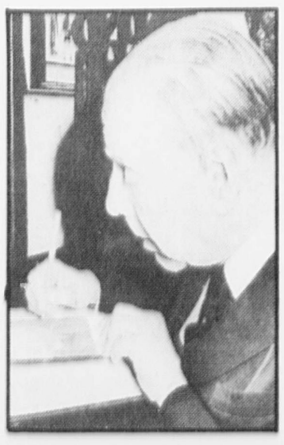

Borges always carries a silver pocket watch with Roman numerals he cannot see. In more youthful days, he teased his failing sight by wearing neckties of bright yellow. "But now I don't bother wearing the yellow ties because even that color has been denied me."

Now, he sees colors only when he dreams.

"When I dream, the colors are bright, vivid, strong and sometimes intolerable — rather brash colors."

He suffers nightmares, some of them recurring relentlessly since childhood.

"I have a nightmare twice a week. They tend to be about being lost, frequently in a labyrinth. Or a dream I've often had is one in which I'm attacked by children or by dwarfs which are quite tiny but very strong, and although I try to beat them away, I'm very feeble and can't do anything about it."

Published in 23 languages

He shudders at the repeated visions in which he stares into a mirror and sees himself reflected as a terrifying Carnival mask. He wants to rip the mask off but is afraid that if he does, there will be a horrible, leprosy-defigured face underneath.

His nightmare images — labyrinths, mirrors, flashing knives and ferocious tigers — all are repeated in his literature.

"Nightmares are a bad habit, eh? But a good creative force, I suppose," he muses.

With works published in 23 languages, Borges rivals James Joyce and Franz Kafka as one of the most-translated authors in contemporary literature. Most literary awards have found their way into his hands, save the elusive Nobel Prize for Literature. He has, however, been a perennial candidate for that award since 1964.

Devoted to literature since the age of four, Borges was equally devoted to his mother, his constant companion and collaborator, until her death nine years ago. Her room is maintained just as it was when she died.

He is more comfortable around leather-bound volumes than around people and happier having classics re-read to him than tolerating the brash style of contemporary writers. Athough he has never read a newspaper and refuses to listen to the radio or television, Borges is remarkably in touch with the modern world and never hesitates to use his gift for language to aim a pointed barb at injustice or at crooked politicians — a habit that makes him loved, hated and relevant.

Every day but Sunday, following a ritual breakfast of dry cornflakes, coffee with milk and tap water (in a land devoted to meat, he dislikes beef), Borges grabs his Irish blackthorn cane from Dublin and maneuvers himself to the well-worn sofa where he holds court until lunch time. An endless stream of journalists, aspiring writers, professors and diplomats badger him with questions and praise.

"They always ask the same questions and I keep giving the same answers, but they don't seem to mind," Borges notes. "I keep repeating myself — an old man can hardly be inventive, can he?"

But Borges is far from boring. He astonishes listeners by quoting dozens of writers in English, French, German, Italian, Old English, Japanese, Icelandic and Spanish. He is always ready to embark on a discussion of time, dreams, drugs, God, death, gangsters, and New Orleans jazz.

His love for literature is matched only by his compulsion toward outrageous political commentaries.

Long a believer that "Argentina is unfit for democracy," Borges had predicted that the powerful union-backed Peronist party, which he calls "a bunch of gangsters," would win last October's elections. When the rival party led by now-President Raul Alfonsin won an overwhelming victory, Borges was pleasantly shocked.

"I always believed what Carlyle said: that democracy was a kind of chaos born of ballot boxes," Borges says. "But now the Argentina of today is a miracle; we are permitted to have some hope."

His commitment to democracy has not always been so convincing.

"I am in complete agreement with the current Chilean government," Borges said after he was awarded an honorary doctorate in Chile in 1976. He had just paid a courtesy call on military president Augusto Pinochet.

Biting the tip of his right index finger thoughtfully, Borges looks back on the incident. "I was told later that the meeting was a mistake. Somebody from Stockholm with friends at the Academy told me that I was about to get the prize, but that when they got the news of my meeting with Pinochet, they thought I was a fascist, and that was that. I never thought the (Nobel) Committee would interpret that politically."

He harbors few hopes of still winning the Nobel. "There's a kind of tradition now, that I shouldn't be given the prize. I'm not expecting anything."

The Pinochet affair is just one of Borges' many controversial forays into political commentary.

After the 1976 military coup that ousted President Isabel Peron from her chaotic, short-lived presidency, Borges pronounced: "Finally, we have a government of gentlemen."

Like many Argentines, Borges spent years unaware that thousands of people were kidnapped, tortured and killed as part of the military regime's campaign to wipe out leftist opposition. But one day in 1980, two women whose teenage children had disappeared came to see him, urging him to take a public stand.

"After hearing their story, I had no choice but to sign the petition. I could do it without running any real risk because I am more or less known. My conscience is clear."

Borges at 85 talks with some young fans

Without you it's the same old story.

For the elderly, life can be just sitting and waiting. Or it can be looking forward to a visiting nurse or homemaker...a friendly chat, a hot meal, a helping hand. The elderly's needs and the special needs of thousands of other people are met through services offered by the 173 agencies affiliated with United Way of Massachusetts Bay. And this year, with fewer government funds, your contribution is more important than ever. Without it — for someone, maybe someone close — life could be the same old story.

Mann's defense

Legal fees cost $60,000

By Edward Cafasso, Staff Writer

NEWTON -- Citizens will have to pay almost $60,000 to a Boston attorney for his successful defense of a taxpayers' suit brought against Mayor Theodore D. Mann almost three years ago and his work so far defending Mann in a related civil rights case.

Approximately fourth-fifths of the bill constitutes Boston-based attorney Edward S. Barhsak's fee for the taxpayers' suit, brought by businessman Vincent Fillipone and 13 other residents, while the remaining cost is partial payment to Barshak for his defense of Mann against charges brought by his former secretary, Diane Ossinger, according to City Solicitor Daniel Funk.

The taxpayers' suit attempted to force the mayor to pay his own legal fees in Ossinger's civil rights claim. After several contradictory lower court decisions, the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court (SJC) overturned the suit this summer.

Ossinger's claim against Mann is still pending in Middlesex Superior Court, according to Funk.

The SJC cleared the way for residents here to foot Mann's legal fees in an unanimous August 7 ruling that upheld the

Village study OK'd

By Edward Cafasso, Staff Writer

NEWTON -- The Board of Aldermen have finally approved spending an initial $80,000 to begin a citywide project designed to create guidelines for future commercial development in each of the city's 13 village centers.

The board's 16-4 vote in favor of the "village study" put to rest, at least temporarily, nearly a year of sometimes contradictory debate over the merits of the ambitious planning proposal. Prior to granting their final approval, aldermen voted 14-4 against placing a $100,000 spending cap on the project.

Aldermen Richard Bullwinkle, Bruce Carmichael, Richard McGrath and Dominic Taglienti all cast ballots in opposition to the study's initial cost. The same four also voted in favor of the spending ceiling request.

Glimpses of our future

NEWTON -- Aldermen were asked to look into their crystal balls last night and say what they thought the Garden City will look like in the year 2000.

Their answers, coming nearly an hour before a majority of them approved the village study - hailed as the key to the city's future facade - were surprising.

Ward 5 Alderman-at-Large Paul E. Coletti: "Well, obviously, by that time I'll be mayor and will have had the opportunity to guide the city for a few years. The city will be primarily residential with thriving business districts, well-manicured properties, slightly larger class sizes and will have residents who feel that their elected representatives are attempting to provide a quality of life that they feel their tax dollars should be going toward."

Ward 3 Alderman Richard J. Bullwinkle: "I don't know because there isn't a total comprehensive plan. We're reaching the point of no return. How much land is there left? We need real planning or I can see some small neighborhood getting knocked off in the process."

Ward 4 Alderman-at-Large Richard J. McGrath: "Unless the city fathers develop a more farsighted ability than they've displayed in the last two years, Newton will be indistinguishable from Brookline, Brighton and

First place

Susan Jackson of Dedham was the top winner of the first, amateur Color Photography Contest sponsored by Transcript Newspapers, Inc.

Her photo of her six-year-old daughter, Sally, looking out from the screened window of a Cape Cod home this past summer, was the unanimous first place choice of the three judges.

The second place photo was taken by James I. Watts of Waltham. His photo was of a man rowing across Tenants Harbor in Maine in the early morning fog in July. He used 200 ASA film. His exposure data was unrecorded. Second place brought a $50 prize to photographer Watts.

The third place prize of $25 goes to Sally Collura of Waltham for her photo of a 96-year-old neighbor sitting out on his front porch with an American flag. The Waltham photographer said her 35 milimeter camera had been stolen last year and since then she had shot pictures with a Minolta 110 pocket camera. That's what she used for her winning entry.

Selected for honorable mention were the following amateur photographers whose entries

Sam Crocetti, above, as a lean, young fighter sportswriters referred to as "a sharpshooter;" and, far right, after 38 years in youth services, as the more mature molder of young boys into "young gentlemen."

Crocetti retires

A generous gentleman

By Kevin C. Kennedy
News Editor

NONANTUM -- Sam Crocetti, the prime mover behind the Newton Boys' Club for almost 30 years, is never taller than when he stoops to help a youth, but he is front-line Celtics material when he stands on his scrapbooks.

Crocetti, 64, is retiring as the director of the Newton Boys' Club. This Thursday, the Boys' Club will honor him with a dinner at American Legion Post #440. Next week, he will be honored by the Newton/Needham Chamber of Commerce as this year's recipient of the prestigious Distinguished Achievement Award.

Crocetti's cozy home on Rosedale Street, in Watertown, is a veritable museum. There, the milestones of his life are captured in trophies, plaques, words and pictures.

He has more scrapbooks than the founder of the Elvis Presley Fan Club. There's the one from his amateur boxing: 67 fights in the environs of his Amsterdam, N.Y., home. The datelines on the well-preserved sports stories are from places like Utica, Pawtucket and Rochester. They suggest a former, more vital era of boxing, before TV made the sport into the cautious, numbers-oriented, billion dollar business it is today.

The photos that go with the stories depict a lean, muscular Crocetti who looks like he knows how to handle himself. Sportswriters repeatedly referred to him as a "sharpshooter."

There's a bigger scrapbook from his professional career, when he showed up in headlines from coast to coast as he tore up the ranks of the Featherweight Division. In 59 fights as a pro, Crocetti leaned hard on the top fighters in the Featherweight Division and "nearly won the crown" in 1940.

He remembers every fight and every man he fought: Gilligan (He was from Buffalo. He was tough! Ohh...!); "K.O." Morgan, from Stamford, Conn., "the uncrowned bantamweight champion of the world;" Jimmy English, from New York, and

Police pact is disputed

By Eric Fehrnstrom
Staff Writer

NEWTON -- State arbitrators have issued a complaint against the city for allegedly undermining good faith negotiations with the police union last April when a disputed contract was unilaterally put into effect.

The decision by the three-member Labor Relations Commission is being hailed as a victory by union representatives, who claimed the contract, which contained the controversial light duty clause, was illegal.

A formal hearing on the complaint will be held Nov. 9 in Boston.

"We feel vindicated," said Lynda Glenn, president of the Newton Police Association, which lists over 200 members.

Policemen here have been operating under the terms of the contract since the beginning of the new fiscal year and have already received two retroactive,

Joey Archibald, the Featherweight Champion who beat Crocetti by the thinnest of margins.

When Crocetti left boxing to join the Army Air Corps in the midst of World War II, the patriotic headlines read: "Still one of the best fighters in the world."

While hovering around the championship, young Sam Crocetti mixed it up with the rich and famous. He fought on an exhibition card that included the great Joe Louis. He fought several fights in Miami, Fla., which was was one of the top rungs in the ladder of professional boxing at the time.

Young Sam Crocetti, from Amsterdam, N.Y., even made it to Hollywood, where newspaper reports chronicled his hobnobbing with some of the luminaries of the star-studded entertainment world. Al Jolson, George Raft and Lana Turner were some of his friends during that time.

Crocetti said his best friend, during his stay in Hollywood, was a young actor named Frankie Darro. Darro made many movies with a group of young actors known as "The Dead End Kids," a group of hard-bitten, streetwise kids who were perfect examples of what a young man might grow up to be without the benefits of a local Boys' Club.

There are two big scrapbooks that cover his 38 years of commitment to training young boys in sports, hoping all the time that what they would really learn would be "to grow up to be young gentlemen ... to succeed in every walk of life."

Crocetti recalls that, after the war, he was back in Amsterdam "just relaxing" and working part-time for the local rec department. While he was checking out his options, he met a man from Catskill, N.Y., who needed some help with the local Boys' Club.

Crocetti went to Catskill and fell in love with his new job. He said his work there reminded him of a scene he had witnessed many times in Yankee Stadium. Crocetti was deeply involved with professional baseball as a scout for years. He still carries his Brooklynn Dodgers identity card in his wallet. He still touts his greatest success, recruiting a young man named Bill Stafford, who enjoyed an outstanding pitching career with the New York Yankees.

In the company of pillars of the local sports scene as Jim Murphy, Luman Barry, Howard Ferguson, Bob Roache, Jim Coakley, Fred Dalicandro and Del Ryan, Sam Crocetti should be proud of his accomplishments.

The scene he remembered when he started work with the Boys' Club in Catskill featured the great Lou Gehrig, the premier sports idol of the era, who used to take time out a couple of mornings a week to run a baseball clinic for the kids from the neighborhood around old Yankee Stadium. "That enthused me to see him working with those kids. I thought it was fantastic. I thought, 'Gee. I'd like to do that someday,'" he said.

Crocetti and his wife, Toni, came to Newton from Catskill in the late 50's. The Newton Boys' Club was in "just a little house" on Dalby Street, across from where the club is now situated. In 1961, he joined forces with Giles E. Mosher, Jr., now chairman of the board of Bay Bank/Middlesex, to find a new home for the club.

Together, they raised $80,000 to buy and renovate an old church across Dalby Street from the club. Crocetti, after his manner, credits Mosher as being "the main force behind the drive."

Since then, the club has offered a wide range of sports programs, along with programs in photography, printing, woodworking, arts and crafts, gymnastics and, most recently, computers.

Crocetti brought his teaching skills to bear at home too, as a den full of athletic and scholastic honors his children have won will bear out.

He hopes to continue to work with the youth of the Garden City, and says he might get more deeply involved with the restitution program he helped to start in Newton District Court.

All that is left is for him to be welcomed into the city's pantheon of "pocket heroes," the men who have worked behind the scenes for years, developing sports programs for young boys, adding their own brand of wisdom and achieving a sort of immortality as those boys take their lessons with them.

In the company of pillars of the local sports scene as Jim Murphy, Luman Barry, Howard Ferguson, Bob Roache, Jim Coakley, Fred Dalicandro and Del Ryan, Sam Crocetti should be proud of his accomplishments.

The winner, Mrs. Jackson, is married and the mother of four children ages 2 through 11. She credits a teacher, Kevin Monaghan of the Dedham High Evening School, with inspiring her several years ago to see the symbolic content of an image in her pictures. She said if it weren't for the help given by her husband, Timothy, she could not spend so much time working on film in her dark room.

Mrs. Jackson says her favorite form of photography is shooting with black and white film but lately she has been using more color.

Her favorite subjects are people shown in their natural environments thereby reflecting their personalities. Mrs. Jackson said when shooting pictures she looks for the quality of light and surrounding background colors around the main subject. She took the winning photo after seeing her daughter at the window. She made two exposures. One, the winning entry, with two windows showing, and the second, a closeup of her daughter in one window. The winning photo was shot on Kodacolor film ASA 200 at 1/125th of a second at f8.

The contest was open to amateur photographers who live in communities served by Transcript Newspapers: Dedham, Needham, Norwood, Westwood, Walpole, Waltham, Newton, Watertown, Weston, Roslindale and West Roxbury. The Transcript papers serving those areas are The Daily Transcript, The News Tribune, The Newton Graphic, The Parkway Transcript, The West Roxbury Transcript, The Needham Chronicle, The Family Shopper and Trib Plus.

The judges were David Wurzel of Newton, renowned photographer and photo editor and former head of newspictures for the New England-New York division of United Press International, Ted Fitzgerald, prize winning photographer of The Daily Transcript and Art Illman, whose photos have won many prizes for The News Tribune.

Entries were color prints no larger than 11 x 14 and slides.

In addition to the winning entry published today, Transcript hopes to publish in the future the other winning pictures and many of the pictures that were selected for honorable mention.

Correction

It was mistakenly reported in last week's Newton Graphic that the Newton Symphony Orchestra is under a new leader. The NSO is, in fact, beginning its 19th season and its third year under the direction of Ronald Knudsen.

This year, however, will find the NSO performing in a new concert hall at Aquinas Junior College, on Walnut Park off Washington Street.

The Newton Graphic regrets the error.

School Committee stipends, unlimited terms are pushed

By Richard Nangle
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Alderman Verne Vance and the City Solicitor Daniel J. Funk are working on language for an amendment to the City Charter that would remove the limitation of the number of terms school committeemen may serve, according to Vance.

The amendment, approved by the Legislation and Rules Committee after an October 3 public hearing, will go before the public next year via referendum if approved by the Board of Aldermen.

Vance is also pushing for an amendment to City Ordinances to allow school committeemen to be paid $1,200 a year.

Letters from the committee, which Vance hopes will appear in local papers this week, will ask local residents their opinions whether the current limit on four consecutive two year terms should be modified or eliminated.

The letter also asks if school committee members should be paid and, if so, how much?

The items are being considered because some city officials are questioning whether members of the School Committee should be treated differently from the Board of Aldermen who are not subject to term limitation and receive $3,000 a year for their services.

Although he admitted the city has twice previously voted down the question of limiting terms of members of the School Committee, Vance said he believes a high-level campaign will convince residents that the current situation is inconsistent.

Aldermen must provide a two-thirds vote for the consecutive term amendment in order for voters to have a chance to make the decision in November, 1985.

"I think there's a decent chance they'll at least put it before the voters to make a decision," Vance said of the board.

But he added "I just don't know where the sentiment is."

Vance said he has lived in Newton since 1971, and although he is aware the measure has failed twice before, he did not remember the actual vote tally.

He hopes a more educated group of voters will reverse earlier referendum failures.

"I think it's a question of equal treatment of all three bodies," he said referring to the mayor's office, Board of Aldermen and School Committee.

In the public hearing on the pay issue school committee members speaking on their own behalf took both sides of the issue.

Some argued that payment to committee members would take away necessary funds for the benefit of schoolchildren. Others said compensation is necessary and justified considering the time and money members must put in to do a decent job.

Babes on parade

WEST NEWTON -- A dozen wide-eyed infants sitting on the floor of Temple Reyim's auditorium are waving their pudgy arms to the sounds of an Anne Murray tune playing on the radio.

Small strands of the gurgling toddlers' whisper-thin hair sway in the breeze created by a circle of laughing and singing mothers, who gently raise and lower a multi-colored "parachute" above their heads.

In the corner, a two-year old toddler waddles over to a low-level basketball hoop and plunks a lightweight ball through the middle of it while her mother observes and coaches from afar.

All of the parents and children here are speaking the language of Gymboree, a special gymnastics and play program which uses colorful equipment and innovative attitudes to provide an atmosphere of sensory stimulation for three-month to four-year-old youngsters.

Gymboree operates on the concept of "integrative play," where the fun shared between parent and child is designed to instill coordination, confidence and awareness in growing youngsters.

Babygym, Gymboree and Gymgrad are the three major components of the program. Babygym utilizes creative rhythms and chants to develop the sensory perceptions and learning skills of three to 12-month-old infants. Gymboree focuses on non-competitive play and individual exploration for one to two-and-a-half-year-olds through special equipment; and Gymgrad leads two-and-a-half to four year olds through a series of "gymbercizes," or choreographed aerobic routines.

"Everything we do is geared to enhance balance, muscle, visual, auditory and tactile growth," says Gymboree president Beth Witcoff, who has spent the greater part of the morning yelling out instructions and providing plenty of cheers for the cooperative achievements of mothers and youngsters.

Witcoff, a former teacher and coach who lost her position to Proposition 2½, was mulling over her disenchantment with public education one morning when she spotted a TV story about Gymboree, then operating in California.

"I saw it, stopped and said, 'That's terrific,'" Witcoff says excitedly. "I love this because it combines business with a purpose. I'm doing something really worthwhile."

The program, which held its Grand Opening in Newton last week, will offer 45 minutes of play at each level on Mondays and Tuesdays. In addition, Witcoff has a Gymboree center in Framingham and is planning two more in Westborough and Worcester.

"We do lots of cheering and lots of yaying," Witcoff continues. "This is a very positive environment."

It is an environment mothers like Marty Henderson swear by.

Henderson, who has been bringing her two-year-old daughter Katy to Gymboree since she was an infant, says a large amount of the agility and self-confidence Katy now displays is due to her experience with Gymboree.

"Everything is so positive," Henderson says. "Children feel good about themselves when they're here." And although he's a year too old, Henderson says her five-year-old son, Douglas, "won't stay off the equipment."

Kathy O'Malley says her 22-month-old son Charles "loves it." The young tike has spent much of the morning climbing and dangling from the height-adjusted bars of a wooden jungle gym.

"It does everything for him," O'Malley says. "And it's good for him to see how other kids play."

Surrounded by the strange, wonderful world of parachute colors, sounds of applause and "baby boogie" dances, most of "the other kids" here seem to second the opinion of young Charles' mother.

Their loud, sing-songy squeals and toothless smiles somehow say more than mothers and instructors ever could.

"A lot of parents tell me there's no way they could give up Gymboree," Witcoff says proudly.

Credit due to county watchdogs

Congratulations to the Middlesex County Advisory Board and to its chairman since its inception, Mayor Theodore D. Mann. As long as we can not get rid of county government, the work of this dedicated group has, at least, whittled its weight down to something we can live with.

A recent review of the actions of the advisory board chronicled some of the results of the board's overseeing the commissioners for the past three years. The most impressive achievement is the reduction of the county budget by 20 percent in the three years since the board was given budget-cutting powers.

A quick look at the major areas of county spending should reveal that the budget cuts have not affected the delivery of services. Personnel classifications have been put in order for the first time in years, and the staffing of the commissioners' office has been cut to the bone.

The physical inventory of the county has finally been detailed, after the advisory board issued an ultimatum prohibiting any capital improvements until the inventory was completed. Funding for future capital improvements has been delayed until the mess of court funding has been sorted out, but that problem can only be pinned on the state. If the state paid the county the millions it owes in courthouse rentals, the watchdogs of the county budget could take a year off.

Formal property reuse policies have been implemented that should avoid a rerun of the scandal that surrounded the attempted sale of the vacant Third District Court in Cambridge for $175,000, approximately one-quarter of its real value.

According to the recent review of the advisory board's effectiveness, problems in the administration of the county hospital were attacked at the top, with the dismissal of the chief hospital management personnel. The county insurance plan was totally realigned several years ago as the result of an expose done by then-aide Bill Gustus, who now is running for the office of County Treasurer. With the support of the advisory board, the insurance contracts were renegotiated to reduce management fees and $97,000 was refunded.

While the overall picture has brightened in the county, the local perspective is dimmed by an assessment for services to Newton that equals 10-percent of the entire county budget. Some changes in the formula for determining assessments might be recommended. Judging a city or town by its gross property value is an oversimplification that ignores the the unique character of the Garden City.

The advisory board review concludes, wryly enough, "It is not certain that the changes brought about in the last three years were a result of Chap. 351 of the Acts of 1981 (the legislation that allowed the formation of the advisory board), but it is clear that they did not occur in the 340 years before."

If the comment sounds a bit snide, the advisory board should be allowed that little indulgence. The members have the numbers to back them up.

Abortion: bogus battleground

By Loring Swaim

In this fascinating political year one of the touchiest questions for any candidate is the "abortion issue."

It is as fraught with pent-up fervor as the religious fratricide in Northern Ireland, the racial struggle in South Africa, or the ideological conflict in Central America.

It exposes sometimes irrational passions. It activates deeply-held religious beliefs (which for some may have turned rusty from disuse).

It is polarized, oversimplified, even trivialized, by bumper-sticker shorthand into "Pro-choice" and "Pro-life," double negatives which make many of us stop to figure out whose on first.

It involves not only the conception of life itself but differing conceptions of women and their rights, of sex and exploitation, of where freedom ends and the life of a fetus begins.

What is surprising, however, as the political season unfolds, is that the debate so often revolves around the narrow questions of when life begins, does a woman have the last word about her own body, and what's the proper way to dispose of an unwanted human being?

Rarely does the debate zoom back and take a wide-angle look at why our society has come to the point of having such problems with its unwelcome children in the first place.

What do you expect if for years you have gnawed away at the moral foundations of society, gotten its youth absorbed in sex and drugs; preached premarital sex, promiscuity, and the sexual revolution; taught macho youngsters that sex is for recreation, not procreation; nurtured a Playboy culture making self-gratification the purpose of heterosexual relationships, taken hardcore pornography out of the closet and piped it directly into the living room, replaced the home with one-parent families and the day care center.

> One wonders why ticklish issues aren't put into perspective during political campaigns. Maybe it's because politicians don't like to put it to their listeners to shape up.

Listening to last weekend's televised confrontation between President Reagan and Walter Mondale - as they discussed "the abortion issue" - it struck me that here, in effect, were national leaders talking about the terminal stages of a hopeless cancer rather than about the therapy that could make it obsolete.

The search for solutions should not begin at the critical stage when alternatives are limited and painful but in the problem's incipiency when a series of remedies would nip the infestation in the bud.

Isn't there something to be said for preventive medicine? Is the real problem abortion or a self-destructive society which spawns two million abortions as the quick solution to self-indulgence?

What do you expect in a hedonistic society? Are people likely to take seriously the deliberate flushing out of a living fetus like disposable children if they've been taught not to take seriously respect for the opposite sex, the lifetime obligations of parenthood, the unique privilege of rearing children, and the value of partnerships in life?

Should the emancipation of women in the market place, armed with equal rights, make children disposable afterthoughts, playing second fiddle to a parent's career?

Isn't the time to think about children and pregnancy and starting a family and abortions when sensitive relationships are forming and before sex takes place rather than afterwards when you discover you've gone too far and conceived a new human being?

Isn't the time for a woman to assert her authority over her body - and for a man to show respect for a woman - when relationships begin, not when they end?

One wonders why ticklish issues aren't put into perspective during political campaigns. Maybe it's because politicians don't like to put it to their listeners to shape up.

Realities of retirement

The moon is blue over Miami

By Leon Daniel

They flocked to South Miami Beach, worn by work, aging but still hopeful, searching for a place in the sun to live out the final sequence in their American Dream.

There was, in those promising years just after World War II, glitter and glamour along the strip of hotels and apartment buildings lining Collins Avenue and Ocean Drive.

To the elderly Jewish sunseekers battered by harsh winters in the great cities of the North, the South Shore looked like a paradise.

There was swimming in the blue Atlantic and sunbathing on the white sand. When the warming sun set, there was dining and dancing beneath the storied moon over Miami.

During the next three decades, however, the dream died slowly, replaced by harsh reality that for many of the elderly has become a nightmare.

The dream first began to fade when younger tourists began opting for more exotic vacation spots in the Carribbean, abandoning South Shore to the retired oldsters living on fixed incomes.

Then came the refugees -- Cuban and Haitian -- into quiet neighborhoods of synagogues, kosher food establishments and shuffleboard courts.

Ocean breezes mixed garlicky cooking odors with the smell of freshly baked bagels. Spanish and Creole threatened to drown out Yiddish and the American accents of Brooklyn and Chicago's North Side.

With the Mariel boatlift, what had been a slow deterioration of a community accelerated. There was an explosion of crime. Oldsters were mugged and their purses snatched in broad daylight.

South Beach, as most call it now, had become the troubled home of one of America's oldest and poorest populations.

Despite a decade-old redevelopment program that promises much but has delivered little, South Beach remains a seedy ghetto that has aged no better than the elderly Americans who live in decrepit buildings whose art deco architectural style is an ironic reminder of better times.

Many of them were nurtured by an earlier vision for America, espoused during the Great Depression and World War II by their hero -- Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

South Beach still is a Democratic stronghold, but it is a shrinking bastion in a state expected to give President Reagan -- a New Deal Democrat turned Republican -- all of its 21 electoral votes in the Nov. 6 election.

Joseph Brosky, 84, who once owned and operated a small hand laundry in Brooklyn, spends his days on the porch of the Breakwater Hotel, a modest establishment facing the ocean. It is his place in the sun he no longer can see.

"I've been blind for five years," said Brosky, who is convinced Reagan plans to reduce Social Security benefits.

"If he does, there'll be a revolution," said Brosky, who worries about his wife, making a poor recovery from a stroke. "I earned my Social Security. I paid my taxes."

Next door, at a rundown hotel converted into a retirement home, a group of women sat on rocking chairs facing the Atlantic.

"It would be wonderful to have a woman vice president," said Vivian Zimmer, a widow who retired as a bookkeeper in Clifton, N.J., and is a staunch supporter of Walter Mondale and his running mate, Geraldine Ferraro.

Gertrude Smith, who prefers talking about her late husband rather than politics, said she had not decided who will get her vote.

"I'm a Jew who was born in Russia and married a handsome Irishman," she said.

Arthur Smith, she added proudly, was a song and dance man in vaudeville.

"Oh, my husband was a wonderful man," she said. "I traveled everywhere with him."

The checks get smaller, the problems get bigger and retirement rests heavily on many who flocked to Miami.

Mrs. Smith said her husband probably had known the president, an assertion that went unchallenged by her friends on the porch.

"Ronald Reagan was in show business too, you know," she said.

There are some in South Beach who are in a fighting mood and armed with the ballot.

They believe the National Council of Senior Citizens when it tells them that since Reagan took office federal spending for America's elderly has been slashed by $24 billion.

Bea Kalstein, who was leaving a Rosh Hashana service at a synagogue three blocks from the beach, does not count herself among them.

Clutching a High Holidays Prayer Book, she said she "very definitely" had made up her mind to vote for Reagan, although she is a registered Democrat.

"The Democratic ticket is very weak," she said. "Geraldine Ferraro lacks experience. Mondale's trying to play up to all these ethnic groups. It's very divisive."

Kalstein, who discloses her age to no man, gave a hint of it when she lauded the Grenada invasion.

"When our boys left, I thought of that old song with the line, 'We won't be back 'til it's over over there.'"

Louis Wasserman, 83, who once drove a beer truck in Brooklyn, sat alone on the porch at the Breakwater Hotel, where he has lived long enough to remember when its halls rang with the laughter of the young.

"I don't worry about elections anymore," he said.

Perhaps listening to the beat of a distant drummer who can be heard only by those who are very old, Wasserman looked out over the blue water and said softly, "Whatever will be, will be."

Payment of parking fines made painless

By Dave Wood

The payment of parking fines may soon enter the electronic age if a bill filed in the Massachusetts House this session becomes law.

But even if it doesn't, persons with at least $15 in Boston parking tickets will be able to settle up by using Visa or Mastercard, according to Assistant Parking Clerk Bruce Graubart.

The city by the end of November should have in place all necessary computer and bank hookups to allow parking ticket holders to charge their fines to credit cards, which officials say will make collection easier for the city and payment easier for the scofflaw.

"During the initial phase, people with any outstanding debt will be able to come into City Hall and use Visa of Mastercard," Graubart said. "Now they have to use cash, money order or personal check.

The new system will also eliminate the number of bounced checks the city receives and will place the collection burden on the U.S. Trust Co. bank, which is handling the credit card account.

"This will be no different than what you see at any department store," Graubart said. "There will be an automatic authorization system where the cards can be passed through the computer terminal."

Initially, only parking tickets can be paid off with credit cards, but Graubart said the city will experiment with credit payments for booted vehicles.

Eventually, payments can be paid via mail and telephone — much like the system in place for concert tickets and sporting events, Graubart said.

The state-wide bill was filed by Rep. Richard Voke, D-Chelsea, at the behest of the Chelsea city clerk.

Voke's bill would only apply to municipalities with a population of at least 25,000 because they have more collection problems.

"The bill contains a local option clause that would not force it upon anyone. I think the banking industry is in favor," Voke said.

The bill has received initial approval and is being reviewed by a legisative committee.

"The city clerk in Chelsea approached me and requested I file it basically because it would eliminate the bookeeping to chase someone who falls behind in payments," Voke said.

Under the Boston plan, city will pay the credit card user fee - usually about 5 percent — by allowing the bank to hold onto the money and accrue interest, Graubart said.

He added that persons owing as little as $15 will be allowed to use a credit card.

"We're trying to do a number of things to reduce people's frustration with the system," Graubart said.

He added that, if credit card use is extended to booted vehicles, persons whose cars have been seized - but who do not have the cash - will be able to get their cars immediately.

The credit system will be especially helpful with the non-renewal program which prevents persons with at least two tickets from renewing their licenses or registrations without first paying off the balance.

"We just re-implemented the non-renewal program, Graubart said. "If you have outstanding tickets in Boston you can't renew a license or registration.

If you owe $200 and can't renew, you could put that amount on the credit card and that would provide another payment option. Tickets must be paid within 21 days to avoid renewal prohibition, he said.

Public input is solicited on whether or not to compensate school committee members

On Oct. 3, the Legislation and Rules Committee of the Newton Board of Aldermen held a public hearing, pursuant to duly-circulated public notice and after publicity in the local newspapers, on two issues of substantial public importance:

1. Should the current limit of four consecutive two-year terms for School Committee members be modified or eliminated?

2. Should the members of the School Committee receive some monetary compensation for their services, and, if so, how much?

These items had been docketed for consideration by the Board of Aldermen of the basic issue whether members of the School Committee should be treated differently from the Board of Aldermen, as to which there is no limit on consecutive terms and the members of which receive compensation of $3,000 a year.

The only persons who attended the public hearing and expressed views on these issues were five members of the School Committee, three members of the Board of Aldermen, and one member of the public. One additional member of the public, the executive director of the Newton Taxpayers Association, attended and informed the committee that the organization had not yet formulated a position on the two issues under discussion but was hoping to do so.

Following the public hearing, the Legislation and Rules Committee voted 4-0:

1. to approve the proposal to eliminate any restriction on the number of consecutive terms for School Committee members with the matter to be reported for action by the full board at its meeting of Oct 15.

2. and to request the City Solicitor to prepare a draft ordinance providing for the same compensation for aldermen and members of the School Committee, which ordinance would be further considered by the committee at its meeting of Nov. 7.

The Legislation and Rules Committee believes that it is extremely important to have the views on these proposals of other interested individuals and organizations in the city prior to final action on them by the board. Thus, we strongly urge all interested individuals and organizations to submit those views in writing by Nov. 1 to the Chairman of the Legislation and Rules Committee, Newton City DHall, 1000 Commonwealth Avenue, Newton, MA 02159.

No place to park around senior housing

Several times a week I visit my mother, who is a Senior Citizen resident at the Horace Mann Senior Citizen Development on Watertown Street in Newton.

Mother has been a resident here for eight years, and for eight years, during school time, it is virtually impossible for me or anyone visiting these most often lonely people to park within a short distance to pick up or drop off or just park to visit for a while.

Most of these elderly people have a hard enough time walking up the stairs to get to their doors without having to walk a half a block or more to the stairways. The entire street from Brookside Avenue to Walker Street on Watertown Street is bumper-to-bumper with cars that belong to the teachers from the Horace Mann School.

I am not asking that the teachers not drive to school. What I am asking is that they please be asked to use their own parking area (in which they have 50 or more spaces) on Albemarle Road, on the school side.

These drivers seem to have no consideration for these seniors who may be lucky enough (such as my mother) to have company or someone to take them out for a daily trip or to do their shopping for them.

Should one of the seniors need an ambulance or a fire engine during these hours, there is no way that they could park and do their job without a problem. The cars park halfway down Brookside Avenue to Watertown Street, around the corner, and completely to the end of the complex. I just do not think it is very fair when they have an entire street of their own to park on.

Please give these people a chance for visitors to park comfortabley - don't you think they deserve the love and attention of their family and friends?

Sincerely,
A mother and grandaughters who care and love to visit our seniors

"In Grandma's Day"

My dear father worked hard in Pettee's Foundry.
With six children to raise we were considered poor.
The old timers didn't receive sick leave or vacations.
They hadn't money for a trip or tour.

The playground meant something great in my time.
It was a pleasure to go there and to play.
Our supplies cost us but a nickle.
The teacher taught us handcrafts every day.

We hadn't any pools built in our backyards.
We swam in the sandpit
swimming hole.
A hand fan was the only fan
we had then,
Besides a shady tree to keep us cool.

Only old wood stoves heated all our houses.
Wintertime our cold water often froze.
We enjoyed family games and cocoa by the fireside,
While the horses plowed through the deep snows.

We often went for picnics in Watt's pasture,
Where many wildflowers and wild berries grew.
We went to school and brought many bouquets.
I often won first prize for those I knew.

We had many pets; we all loved them:
Dogs, cats, ducks and chickens
by the score.
We owned a huge pet rabbit named Peter.
Our menagerie could not hold anymore.

At times we'd get a chunk of ice from the iceman.
The fruitman would sell in our neighborhood.
Our milkman left the order on our doorstep.
Our pet dog stole the milk
when'er she could.

One could not say our puppy wasn't clever.
She'd want out early when she heard a stir.
Mother caught her tipping milk bottles.
We feared the devil had gotten into her.

My brother made a raft he named 'Tarbaby.'
He sailed it alone on Meadow Brook,
That being the way Dick liked to travel,
While Joseph journeyed further with his book.

Dick had built a hotdog stand near the roadway.
The golfers passing by would buy a few.
I helped out mixing
the Kool-Aid.
We always found many things to do.

On Halloween we'd celebrate much differently.
My brothers took my mother's sheets to wear.
Jimmy would climb upon
John's shoulders.
They'd wander off to give some folks a scare.

We're grateful to our sister
Mary.
She watched over us like a mother hen.
Her main interest was our home and cooking,
Not only now but going back to then.

Teacher settlement is urged

Open letter to the School Committee, Newton Teachers Association:

The League of Women Voters of Newton is writing to express concern on the subject of teacher contract negotiations.

The league has a long-standing interest in education. We feel the high quality of Newton' schools is directly related to the expertise of the teaching staff. Needless to say, adequate recompense for the teachers is important.

At the same time, the league is sadly aware of the financial difficulties facing the city in the years to come. Contract negotiations must proceed with these fiscal constraints in mind.

The school year of 83-84 was a particularly difficult one for elementary school families, coping with painful decisions on consolidation. It was a divisive year for the community. Our city's schools need a year of building and cementing relationships, not one of disruption and mistrust.

Our community has everything to gain from an early settlement, avoiding the embittering experience of job actions. It is the hope of the League that both sides can come to an agreement swiftly.

Lonely at the top

By Rusty Brown

Three years ago I wrote an optimistic column about the increasing number of women directors of corporations. I considered board jobs the new frontier for executive women.

Well — it looks like I overestimated the rush to the table. Not as many women are seated around the polished mahogany as was hoped.

A Business Week feature this month reports that only 367 women sit among the 15,500 men on the boards of the 1,300 major U.S. firms. That's a small increase from the 332 women reported three years ago.

In a July New York Times article, executive recruiter Lester Korn of Korn-Ferry International said, "For better or for worse, the feeling that you must have a woman on the board has crested."

A Wall Street Journal item reported that women directors get the fewest stockholder votes. Lois Wyse, a popular author and president of Wyse Advertising Inc., candidly admitted, "I always come in last." She is a director of Pittsburgh Consolidated Natural Gas and a Cleveland department store, The Higbee Co.

Ms. Wyse thinks older male stockholders are holdouts against women board members. One stockholder, however, liked her well enough to propose marriage after seeing her picture in the annual report.

The cold truth is that 64 percent of the nation's largest companies still have no women on their boards. That information comes from Catalyst, a New York based non-profit agency monitoring the progress of working women.

Luckily, those few who have already passed through the hallowed doors are agreeable to sharing expertise and experiences with those who hope to follow.

Just such an encounter took place in Albuquerque recently, when aspiring board members met with three impressive women directors. One was Pat Carbine, publisher of Ms. magazine. Another was Francine Neff, former U.S. treasurer, and the third was Laura Threet, community development activist and one-time Albuquerque school board president.

Ms. Carbine is on the boards of the New York Life Insurance Co., Dollar Dry Dock Saving Bank and the Magazine Publishers Association, and was the first chairwoman of the Advertising Council board.

She thinks women fill important roles on boards: "They can get to know the women in the company and be responsive to their concerns... a sort of vertical network. They can pay close attention to whether the company is actively recruiting women for executive positions and they also can evaluate the impact of benefit plans on women employees."

Ms. Threet chaired Albuquerque's United Way, and is now the first woman in the YMCA's 70-year history to head the board. She feels women provide an important balance. "It's true," she said, "men are more interested in brick and mortar and women are more interested in human services. Boards need both viewpoints."

Ms. Neff, the woman who once signed all U.S. currency, is on the boards of Hershey Foods Corp., Louisiana Pacific Corp., and E-systems, a firm involved in electronic communications and weapons. She suggested women train for board jobs by getting experience on political or community financial committees. "Don't go into traditional women's areas," she said. "And when you make it to the corporate board, get on the finance or audit committees because that's where the real power is."

All admitted they have had to cope with being the lone board woman. Recalled Ms. Threet: "One board member told me how nervous I made him and said he didn't know how to treat me. I said, 'Why don't you just treat me as your peer.'"

That ideal, I fear, will not come until more women are company officers. Recent reports indicate that only 1,000 women — compared with 49,000 men — hold senior management positions in the country's major corporations.

No wonder the path to the board room is so narrow, and the woman's place at the table so alone.

$80,000 village study approved

Planning Director Barry Canner has told aldermen the total study will likely cost $200,000 or more, but any further requests for funding will have to be approved by aldermen.

McGrath began debate on the proposal by outlining several expensive studies, like those done on trash collection, public works yards, Newton South High School's athletic complex, Underwood School and Cold Spring Park, which he said were never used by the city.

Calling the suggested funding "an open check book," McGrath argued unsuccessfully that the cost benefits and data base for the project required more discussion.

Alderman Robert L. Tennant countered by indirectly calling McGrath "the voice of doom" and wondered aloud "why there isn't some positive thinking by some certain people."

Bullwinkle rose to say, "I don't think its negative thoughts when we talk about taxes and costs to the city," and said he thought the study should be done by in-house planning department staff using existing data.

Alderman Verne Vance then pointed out that "the city can't spend a nickel more than $80,000" without coming back to aldermen with additional funding requests.

Borrowing President Ronald Reagan's well-worn "Here we go again" rejoinder, Taglienti demanded city planners tell aldermen the complete and final cost of the study now.

"Tell them to tell us now, not after they spend $80,000...Canner hasn't asked anybody in Thompsonville what they want. They're telling us what were going to have before they ask us what we want to have," he said.

Alderman Paul E. Coletti agreed that the study would "take a lot of time and money," but asked his colleagues not to be "afraid of the expense. The product is what's important and it will be a quality product.

Alderman Ronald Marini, who switched his stated position when the time came for a final vote, called the project "a waste of money," while Alderman George Mansfield said it would be "tough to address current concerns" without the benefit of such a "very helpful tool."

Carmichael, playing on one description of the study as "the bible" for the city's future, said, "Gideon gives his bibles away, we pay $200,000 for ours," and asked aldermen to reject the $80,000 request because "we're heading toward a much larger figure."

> 'They're telling us what were going to have before they ask us what we want to have.'
> Ald. Dominic Taglienti

It was almost a year ago that planner Alison Cohen and Planning Board Chairman Edward J. Dailey drafted the city's request for a $75,000 grant to conduct a similar project in Newton Centre and Newton Corner, which are considered the two villages currently experiencing the most intense development pressures.

In January, the state Executive Office of Community Development turned down the city's application for funds, placing future funding of the study in Mayor Theodore D. Mann's hands.

Meanwhile, the board, after rejecting two proposals to limit the height and increase the setbacks afforded new commercial developments, passed a unanimous resolution calling on the mayor to undertake a comprehensive study of the development pressures on villages.

Mann responded by placing $80,000 for the project in his Fiscal 1985 budget, which aldermen rejected late this spring because the specific scope of the study was not known.

Once the city's surplus was established, Mann came back two months ago with another funding request and Planning Director Barry Canner presented aldermen with a tentative draft of what would be expected from the independent consulting firm hired for the project.

McGrath, unable to get his colleagues to agree on a $100,000 spending ceiling, employed parlimentary tactics to delay the item for another month until the board finally moved to get the study off the ground last night.

Watertown. I can see a concrete curtain of high rises along the Mass Pike due to air-rights development."

Ward 2 Alderman Ronald A. Marini: "Unless we come up with a sound plan for the future to regulate both the residential and business community, there will be little open space and less conservation areas left."

Ward 7 Alderman-at-Large Dominic J. Taglienti: "It's going to look like Brookline. It'll be Cleveland Circle and Coolidge Corner from Route 9 to Commonwealth Avenue."

Ward 7 Alderman W. Arthur Reilly: "It's much too early to make an intelligent analysis. Ask me this time next year after I've had a chance to be on (the newly-established Economic Development Commission). We're going to dictate what the city looks like in the year 2000."

Ward 4 Alderman Carol Ann Shea: "I think it will be mostly residential neighborhoods, similar to what it is now, with the villages intact. There will be some developments at Riverside, on Route 9 and Needham Street. I don't think there'll be any changes in what's residentially zoned."

Ward 2 Alderman Elaine M. Gentile: "Buck Rogers is probably going to flying around...I see the city more developed, more dense, built up and commercialized. What we have for open space now probably won't be there."

Ward 2 Alderman-at-Large Edward L. Richmond: "I think there may be some higher buildings than we now have in some commercial areas, but the basic nature of the city will remain unchanged. It will be a residential city with commercial enclaves, not as dense as the urban areas of Cambridge and Brookline."

Ward 6 Alderman George E. Mansfield: "We don't have a clear idea of what alternatives we might be heading for. We need to generate a clearer picture of those alternatives so we can stop making incremental planning decisions."

> 'We will have a tunnel from Weston to Boston with all the air rights over the Massachusetts Turnpike snatched up.'
> Ald. Robert Tennant

Ward 6 Alderman-at-Large Rodney Barker: "It will depend on the public policy decisions made in the next five years. It could become intolerably overcommercialized, if the wrong decisions are made. Hopefully, it will still be the beautiful and attractive city it is now."

Ward 2 Alderman-at-Large Louis Irwin: "It will still be a pleasant, overwhelmingly suburban community with somewhat more effective land use development that retains all the essential social amenities - like a modern main library."

Ward 3 Alderman-at-Large Robert L Tennant: "If there are not sufficient controls, we will have a tunnel from Weston to Boston with all the air rights over the Massachusetts Turnpike snatched up. There'll be high-rise apartment houses from Newton Corner to the Wellesley line due to the scarcity of building properties. Development will have to go up rather than out."

Ward 8 Alderman-at-Large Cynthia S. Creem: "The city isn't going to be that much different than it is now because I believe things go in cycles. The city right now isn't that much different from what it was 20 years ago."

validity of the city's "indemnification ordinance," which protects elected officials and department heads from financial loss while defending themselves against civil rights suits arising from their municipal duties.

Barshak's defense in both cases will cost the city's residents almost 72 cents each or exactly $59,792.08.

According to Funk's request for payment, Barshak's services cost $250 from July 1, 1980 to June 30, 1981; $14,777.50 from July 1, 1981 to June 30, 1982; $19,057.50 from July 1, 1982 to June 30, 1983; $21,650.50 from July 1, 1983 to June 30, 1984; and, $150 from July 1 of this year to the August 7 SJC ruling.

Barshak's legal fees on both matters cost a total of $55,885.50 to which he added $3,906.58 worth of "expenses," the docket item shows.

FinCom will decide the appropriation from surplus at its meeting next Monday night, a session which both Funk and Barshak are expected to attend.

Funk stressed that Barshak is still at work defending Mann against Ossinger's four-and-a-half-year-old claim. Once that lingering controversy is finally decided by the courts, he will likely present the city with a final bill for legal services rendered.

Ossinger, who was tried for allegedly cashing the mayor's weekly payroll checks and keeping the money for herself, claims Mann fired her without due process of law in March 1980. The city charged her with 44 counts of larceny, but she was acquitted of all the claims later that year.

five percent pay increases that were included as part of the document's economic package.

The contract was intended to cover a two year period beginning in 1982, took more than two years to negotiate and is scheduled to expire at the end of the current fiscal year.

Glenn said the union wants the LRC to direct the city to drop the clause in the contract that contains the light-duty provision and solicit agreements that would ensure the bargaining process proceeds smoothly in the future.

"Newton police officers work hard to protect the lives and safety of the public in this community and we only ask for fair treatment in the bargaining process," she said.

Union lawyers are also asking for the interest lost on the two five percent payraises, which were awarded retroactively because of the duration of the bargaining process.

According to Steven Day, spokesman for the LRC, the commission will either dismiss the complaint or find for the union, in which case it is empowered to remedy the situation.

The light duty clause requires officers injured while on the job to return to work if their disabilities allow them to perform some type of departmental chore.

The city has maintained the clause is intended to get the most out of the taxpayer's dollar.

State law enables injured officers to recieve full weekly compensation on a tax-free basis for the duration of their disabilities. The union is now moving on two fronts to settle the light-duty issue -- at the LRC and in Middlesex Superior Court, where both sides to the issue are now preparing depositions for an appellate court hearing that could decide the legality of light duty once and for all and set a precedent with statewide ramifications.

BC drops charges against Jones

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

WEST NEWTON -- After almost a month of turmoil, Newton Centre native Harlan E. Jones walked into the bright sunshine outside Newton District Court Tuesday a happy man.

His wide smile was the result of Justice Paul A. Chernoff's acceptance of a motion by Boston College officials to dismiss the two misdemeanor charges brought against him.

"I couldn't be happier. It's about time," the 21-year-old student said after the dismissal of "Complaint #1611A" left him with untarnished records.

Jones, a sophomore at Boston University who hopes to pursue a career in broadcasting, is the son of School Committee Vice Chairman Katherine E. Jones, the Ward 2 representative, and Hubert L. Jones, dean of BU's School of Social Work. He was arrested during a Sept. 17 lecture by conservative author William F. Buckley, Jr., on the BC campus.

His entire session before Chernoff, which was attended by former Boston mayoral candidate Mel King, lasted about three minutes with the dismissal coming after Jones and his attorneys signed an agreement with BC University Counsel Philip Burling that guaranteed the legality of the Jones' arrest would not be questioned should he decide to pursue a civil rights suit against the school.

All agreed that, in the words of Burling, "to continue this simply injures both parties."

King, who is a close friend of the Jones family, said after the session, "(The case) shouldn't have been here in the first place. I think it's very clear that (BC officials) were in a situation where they couldn't justify the actions they took. I'm glad for him and I think everybody learned from this."

Along with King, Ward 5 Alderman Michael A. Malec, who chairs BC's sociology department, Alderman Matthew Jefferson, who heads the local branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), BC Psychology Professor Michael Saks, a West Newton resident, and three BC law students all attended Jones' court appearance.

Both Saks and Malec called on BC administrators to "take some leadership position" in explaining why Jones' arrest occurred in the first place and what effect their "embarassing" handling of the incident will have on future free speech issues on campus.

The dismissal came despite earlier reports that Burling and other BC officials - after reading an exclusive interview with the outspoken Jones published in the News Tribune last Friday - had decided not to drop the charges of disorderly conduct and disrupting a school assembly lodged against the student.

During that interview, Jones said he has asked BC for $20,000, a full public apology and university effort that would bring civil rights leader Jesse Jackson to speak on the BC campus for the same $7,500 honorarium paid Buckley - all in return for his promise not to sue the school for allegedly violating his First Amendment and civil rights during the incident.

"We have an offer on the table that they can work with," Jones said Tuesday during a recess in the court proceedings. His lawyers, Boston-based attorney David Kelston and Massachusetts Civil Liberties Union (MCLU) staff attorney Majorie Heins, have both advised Jones to say no more about the on-going negotiations with BC.

"We're going to talk. (Burling) has made it clear that BC is interested in some kind of settlement, but I think it's probably not appropriate to talk about the give-and-take of the settlement process," Heins said Tuesday.

Burling would not comment on any aspect of the case, including a settlement that would preclude a possible suit by Jones.

Kelston also maintained his stance that Jones' highly visible arrest - not his actions prior to arrest - served as the main cause of any disruption to Buckley's lecture.

In a previous interview, Jones said he believed sexism and racism played a role in the incident and said his involvement was spontaneous and not part of a planned protest.

Jones has said he paid $2 to attend Buckley's speech, which served as a prelude to BC's Social Justice Lecture Series, and was approached during the event by BC sophomore Denise Paquin, whom he said he had never met before.

After asking him if he was enjoying the lecture, Paquin then asked Jones to help her hold a banner that read, "Paying $7,500 to an ultra-conservative, multi-millionaire is social injustice," according to Jones.

After quietly unfurling the message in a balcony behind the podium where Buckley was speaking, a pair of BC police officers allegedly attempted to take the banner away and told Jones to either leave the auditorium or be arrested for trespassing.

Jones refused to answer and when arresting officer Sgt. Gene Neault attempted to take his arm, Jones, who is black, fell down on the floor in a position of passive resistance. He was eventually handcuffed and dragged out of the auditorium while many of the 1,500 people in attendance reportedly cheered and shouted "Shoot him."

About half the BC campus police force received the authority to carry handguns when the fall semester began a month ago.

Paquin, who is white, was escorted out of the lecture hall by student government officials and never charged with any offense, prompting many local black community leaders, BC professors and other educators to claim the school's handling of the incident bordered on racism.

Business bears brunt of newest tax burden

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — After flirting with a tax cut for business owners and narrowly defeating a request that the mayor use surplus monies to reduce tax rates across-the-board, the Board of Aldermen has decided to continue taxing commercial properties here at the highest allowable rate.

The move essentially creates fiscal 1985 tax rates of $20.34/$1,000 for residential properties and 34.21/$1,000 for commercial land. The previous mill rates were $19.33 (residential) and $33.51 (commercial). All first-half tax bills should be in the mail to property owners here were sent out last Monday.

If, according to Assessing Board Chairman Robert Palmer, the average home here is worth $125,000, the owner of that home will soon see a tax bill about $50 higher than the fiscal 1984 one received only five months ago.

The board's final decision on the tax burden issue came after two hours of protracted debate and two weeks of delays that are likely to cost taxpayers about $150,000 in lost interest revenue.

After wading through some parlimentary confusion and several different attempts to cut the burden on both businessmen and residents, aldermen voted 18-1 to continue the city's policy of placing the highest allowable tax burden on the 1,500 commercial properties here.

Staunch business advocate Robert L. Tennant, who originally suggested decreasing the commercial tax burden, cast the lone vote against the proposal.

Only minutes before that vote was taken, the board voted 14-5 against decreasing the commercial tax burden by 10 percent. If it had passed, the reduction would have meant a substantial cut in the city's commercial tax rates and higher than expected rates for residential taxpayers.

Aldermen Tennant, Richard Bullwinkle, Sondra Shick, Verne Vance and W. Arthur Reilly voted in favor of the commercial tax cut.

By a 12-7 vote, aldermen also defeated a proposal by Alderman James Regan to decrease the commercial tax burden by 5 percent and then request the mayor use $700,000 in surplus city funds to effect a proportionate reduction in the residential tax rate.

The board's final action of the night was its narrow rejection of a non-binding resolution proposed by Alderman Richard J. McGrath.

McGrath asked his colleagues to request that Mayor Theodore D. Mann use anywhere from $500,000 to $1 million in free cash to reduce residential taxes from $16 to $33 and commercial taxes from $24 to $48 across-the-board.

Frawley, Backman face off in senate race

By Larry Grady
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Republican State Senate candidate Regina M. Frawley of Brookline is challenging veteran incumbent Jack Backman on a number of issues including crime and rehabilitation, saluting the American flag and tax policies.

An independent until a few weeks ago, Frawley was asked to challenge Backman by the Republican State Committee. She has sat beside Backman as a Brookline Town Meeting member and was formerly on the executive board of the Brookline League of Women Voters.

A Regis College graduate and a master's degree candidate at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Tufts, Frawley has been a free lance writer for such publications as the Christian Science Monitor.

"I sat beside Jack Backman at Brookline Town Meeting and I heard him argue that we shouldn't salute the American flag because it was too much like a Nazi salute and he couldn't salute the flag because of our country's policies in Central America. But the minute the TV cameras appeared he said nothing. I think the flag is a symbol of unity, a symbol of a family. Sure, we have disagreements in the family, but we don't reject the symbol of the family."

Backman's theories of crime and rehabilitation have been tried for 20 years, Frawley says, "and they are a failure. Twenty years ago I didn't lock my door in Bo Brookline, but now I have to. Jack (Backman) has good intentions about helping the elderly, but they are getting mugged under his policies."

'I heard him argue that we shouldn't salute the flag ... because it was too much like a Nazi salute.'
Regina M. Frawley

She recalled the recent incident at Walpole prison where Backman "went into the prision for an hour and came out saying the correction officials were using excessive force. He only listened to the prisioner's side of the story."

Later, Frawley continued, there was a hearing at the State House called by Backman, but when the State Correction Commissioner Michael Fair came to testify, "Backman said he didn't want to hear him because he wasn't ready" Frawley said.

Frawley said she agreed with Rep. Joseph DeNucci of Newton, a Democrat, who saw Backman retreat and said, "For shame." Frawley approaches fiscal matters through the attitudes of Citizens for Limited Taxation. She noted a couple of things. "Backman doesn't have courage. On 14 of 20 issues monitored by CLT, Backman did not vote on six of them even though he voted on other issues on those days.

"Which reminds me," she said. "Backman has missed 40 roll calls or one in five roll call votes. Only five other state senators have such a poor record. If I'm elected, I'll be a full time senator without a law practice and insurance business on the side."

Frawley would like to debate Backman "but so far he's backed off," she said. As an example of how Backman claims to help the elderly, but fails to be consistent, Frawley noted that he will vote for increased salaries for home care aides, but against tax breaks for families who take care of the elderly at home.

If elected, Frawley says her first priority will be to pass legislation designed to protect children from sexual abuse in day care centers. Day Care centers should have the right to know if there are previous sexual abuses in the records of applicant workers. Schools should get funds for special projects to teach children how to recognize sexual abuse and how they can prevent it or get help and where.

She also wants the courts to allow children to testify with a certain amount of protection, such as using video tapes and having the defense submit questions in writing so that "emotional abuse of children testifying will be taken away." She said a Boston City Hospital program in this area shows a lot of promise and should be implemented elsewhere.

"Backman has been representing the special interests of prisoners and others. We need a legislator to represent all the people in Newton and Brookline. I want to be that full-time person," she said.

NEWTON — Democratic State Sen. Jack Backman and his Republican challenger Regina Frawley are expected to have at least three or four face-to-face opportunities to debate charges and countercharges.

Backman said he will debate Frawley Oct. 15 before the Brookline League of Women Voters and Oct. 23 before the Brookline Kiwanis and the Newton League of Women Voters at a date to be announced.

Frawley "was quoted as saying I refused to debate her, but it isn't so," said Backman.

Frawley said she had asked Backman to debate through a third party and he refused so "I called the League of Women Voters and a newspaper asking them to sponsor a debate. Then they did."

Frawley is a former executive board member of the Brookline League of Women Voters. She has been a registered independent until asked by the GOP State Committee to run against Backman, she said.

Backman disputed several charges made by Frawley in an interview. For example, he denied ever saying while seated beside Frawley at Town Meeting that he was against saluting the American flag at town meeting because it was like a "Nazi salute."

In fact, Backman added, "I never sat beside Ms. Frawley at Town Meeting. I did sit behind her at one meeting."

Frawley said, "He did sit beside me. TV newsmen Chet Curtis and Dan Rea crawled over me to get to Backman but he wouldn't repeat his words about

'No one has fought the Nazi's ... more than I have. I'm against any kind of Fascism.'
Sen. Jack Backman

the Nazi salute on camera. I stand by my statement. He said it."

Backman not only denied he was against tax breaks for those families who take care of elderly in their homes, but he filed a bill, Senate 1638, "that would give those families a tax break."

Frawley said she was relying on a Citizens for Limited Taxation report that showed Backman skipping a vote on tax breaks for families with elderly on June 4 "while he voted for other bills on that same day."

Backman denied he had missed 40 roll call votes making him one of half a dozen senators who missed one in five roll calls.

Backman said he checked his record after the Frawley interview and found he had missed only 12 roll calls which gave hima 91 percent record.

Backman said he was particularly distressed at Frawley saying he compared to American flag salute with the Nazi salute. "I'm a veteran and I fought in Europe and I'm a member of the Veterans of Foreign and the Jewsih Veterans. I'd never make that comparison between the American salute and the Nazi salute "because no one has fought the Nazi's who killed six million of my people more than I have. I'm against any kind of Fascism."

He voted against the flag salute at town meeting, he said, "because we were doing alright with the Star Spangled Banner and I wanted to continue that way."

On the issue of prison reform, Backman denied he listened only to the prisoners' side when he charged prison officials used excessive force in recent disturbances.

The reason he did not want to hear testimony from Corrections Commissioner Michael Fair at a subsequent hearing called by the Joint Human Services Committee of which he is co-chairman was that "Commissioner Fair was not invited and he had not published his written report" of the disturbances.

Frawley said news reports of the hearing indicated other legislators wanted to hear Fair's side of the story and Rep. A. Joseph DeNucci was quoted as saying "Shame, Shame" to Backman on his refusal to hear Fair.

Backman said he didn't have all the details about the future debate formats. Frawley said she preferred a debate form, instead of each candidate making an opening statement and then answering questions for the audience.

Teachers' talks settled

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Negotiating teams have arrived at a tentative teachers' contract which ends a marathon 20-hour bargaining session, at least temporarily.

The negotiators will not know whether or not their work paid off for a couple more weeks, however, as it will be at least this long before teachers vote to accept or reject the document.

A first-year, across-the-board wage increase of five percent which would climb to six in the second year, clearcut evaluation and reductions-in-force (rif) language, and a continuation of the manner in which the city contributes to teacher's health insurance are some of the highlights of the new teacher contract.

Newton Teachers Association President Tony Croce said that NTA negotiation representatives have to meet and review fine points of the contract before sending it to the printers. A copy of the final document will then be distributed to Unit A members, who will be given "a reasonable amount of time" to study the contract.

An informational meeting will precede actual voting, which Croce hopes will take place within the next two weeks.

An issue Croce labeled "significant" for teachers is the fact that the dollar cap Mayor Theodore Mann attempted to place over the city's contribution to educators' health insurance will not be implemented.

"We agree there's got to be some way to control hospital costs, but the concept of a dollar cap was unacceptable," Croce said. "I'm happy to say the School Committee more or less agreed with us."

Although Croce said he is not "entirely happy" with the contract, in that it "doesn't include the monies Newton teachers believe they fairly deserve," he noted that "We looked at some of their provisions and on balance it is reasonable. If we thought hanging on would have gotten more money, we would have hung in there. But at this time, with the way money is in the city, I think it's the best we could get."

Teachers on lookout for child abuse

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Child abuse. The shock of one reported instance after another of physical, sexual or neglectful treatment of children has provoked school systems across the nation to design programs alerting parents and educators to the existence of this domestic crime.

Supervisor of Attendance Irwin Hoogheem heads the office which receives all reports of abuse in the Newton Public Schools. He says the Garden City has been ahead of its time confronting the problem.

"This office has always focused on detecting and dealing with youth problems (such as abuse)," Hoogheem says.

In 1978, Hoogheem and attendance counselor Mary LeBlanc conducted a series of workshops utilizing filmstrips, pamphlets, discussion groups and speakers from the state's Division of Social Services to alert and inform secondary school educators. At that time, they also distributed system-wide a memo outlining the methods and legal responsibilities of reporting suspected cases.

Discussions of the subject will continue among principals and teachers this year and Hoogheem says he will continue to review new school-oriented detection workshops like that recently offered by the National Education Association. The attendance supervisor doesn't see any immediate need, however, for more formal workshops.

"The elementary school principals feel the staff has been very good at reporting," says Hoogheem. Both he and LeBlanc agree that Garden City teachers are "excellent" when it comes to reporting cases. "It's not unusual for teachers to volunteer to remain in the cases even though they aren't required to after the initial reporting," according to LeBlanc.

Current school regulations and a Massachusetts state law punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 require all teachers and other school faculty who suspect some form of child abuse to contact the appropriate person in their school.

In the Garden City schools, teachers go to the principal, who then must decide if submitting a written report to the supervisor of attendance is warranted. Once he receives a written report, Hoogheem must determine if the case warrants a call to the Division of Social Services (DSS), a state agency which pursues all of the legal recourse necessary to investigate and resolve the case.

Hoogheem attributes much of the willingness of Garden City teachers to report abuse to the way their city's program is organized. "There is concern that youngsters will be taken away from the parents," Hoogheem said. "A lot of teachers are more confident because our first agenda is to contact and get help for the family."

Because reports from all schools go to Hoogheem's office, the attendance supervisor has also been able to establish a relationship with the DSS which James M. Breay, the agency's acting director in Newton, describes as "excellent. In many ways, Newton is a model for what communities should be doing statewide," Breay said.

But no matter how good the programs, Hoogheem and LeBlanc admit there is "no magic solution" for detecting abuse. Although physical scars and bruises can be obvious indicators of physical abuse, they say signs of neglect may be more subtle. "A child who is always coming to school hungry may be neglected," Hoogheem says. "A child who continually arrives at school early and leaves late, may be indicating that there's something at home he doesn't want to go to."

Dr. Margaret Addis, head counselor at Newton South High School, says detecting abuse is a matter of "watching out for certain circumstances and deciding what they point to.

"If a child's clothing is different from a couple of months ago, worn out or soiled, this could be a case of neglect, or simply that the child keeps wearing worn out clothing the parent has repeatedly told them to stop wearing," says Addis.

Hoogheem says one of the most frustrating aspects of his job is knowing a case of abuse exists but not having the evidence to prove it. A prime example is the indirect damage done to a child who has been exposed to wife or sibling abuse.

Although Hoogheem makes dealing with the problem a priority when it arises, the attendance supervisor says abuse probably constitutes the lowest percentage of the youth problems his office handles.

But Hoogheem emphasizes that when abuse does occur, it is not just in less affluent families.

"Contrary to what many think, abuse crosses all socio-economic lines. It is equal across the board," he says.

LWV sponsor public forum on candidates

NEWTON — The League of Women Voters of Newton will host a Candidates' Night on Oct. 23 at 8:15 p.m. followed by a social hour at 9:30 p.m. at the First Baptist Church in Newton Centre. The public forum will feature candidate from the Third Middlesex-Norfolk District State Senate seat and the Fourth District Congressional seat.

Present at the debate will be incumbent Jack Backman, the Democratic candidate and his Republican opponent Regina Millette-Frawley. Jim Forte, challenger for the Congressional seat will be present for the entire evening. Congressman Barney Frank will arrive at 9:30 p.m.

The format includes opening statements by Backman and Frawley followed by a 45-minute question and answer period of audience submitted questions.

Since Frank is unable to arrive until 9:30 p.m., one of his aides and Forte will present opening statements, but will not take questions.

All four candidates will be available during the social hour. Cider and doughnuts will be served during the social hour, which will allow for more personal contact with the candidates.

Catherine Fitch, chair of voter service for the Newton League, feels that the format "gives Newton residents the opportunity to have their questions answered and to meet the candidates."

This direct question and answer format is "one of the most important functions of the league," according to Anne Grantham, president of the Newton LWV. "The league not only function on the national level, by sponsoring the presidential candidates debates, but plays a very important role on various local levels as well."

The public is encouraged to attend. For further information call 964-0333.

Jody Powell to teach at BC

CHESTNUT HILL — Jody Powell, White House press secretary to former President Jimmy Carter, has been named the third Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr., professor of American Politics at Boston College.

Powell, 41, will occupy the O'Neill chair in the political science department for one year, beginning in January. During his first semester Powell will teach a course on "politics and the media."

Established by Boston College in honor of U.S. House Speaker O'Neill, who graduated from the university in 1936, the chair is endowed by a $1.3 million gift made to Boston College by alumni and friends of O'Neill on the occasion of his 67th birthday in 1979.

Announcing the appointment of Powell, Prof. Robert Faulkner, chairman of Boston College's political science department, said, "The O'Neill chair has never been filled by someone from the executive branch. Powell brings extensive White House experience. Of all the White House staff he was closest to the President. Powell's direct knowledge of the actual workings of both a modern presidential campaign and the modern White House is very rare.

"Having been both a press secretary and now a member of the press corps, Powell offers an additional advantage for a holder of the O'Neill chair: he can provide a first-hand account of the role of the media in American political life generally and in the affairs of the Presidency in particular."

Since leaving the White House in 1981, Powell has worked as a national political columnist for the Dallas Times Herald and Los Angeles Times Syndicate and a news commentator for ABC News.

Prior to serving as President Carter's press secretary from 1977-81, Powell served as press secretary for the Jimmy Carter Presidential Campaign from 1975-76, and from 1971-75 he served in the same capacity for then-Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter.

Powell was born in Cordele, Georgia, in 1943, and attended the U.S. Air Force Academy from 1961-64. He received a B.A. from Georgia State University in 1966 and did postgraduate studies at Emory University from 1966-70. In 1970 he joined the staff of then-State Sen. Jimmy Carter as a personal aide.

Powell, his wife, Nan Sue Jared; and daughter, Emily Claire, reside in Washington, DC.

The old ...

... And the new

This scene, looking west from West Newton Square toward what is now the Massachusetts Turnpike overpass, hasn't changed much in 70 years. The photo on the left was printed on a postcard dated 1916. It gives a good idea of everyday life, as some pedestrians shop, while others anticipate the trolley car's passing. In shot on the right, automobiles replace the horse-drawn carriages of old, but trees have been planted as an attempt to salvage the village character of yesterday.

West Newton

Forever changing, but still 'home'

Suzanne M. Dulude
Asst. News Editor

In the days when those in the western part of the city felt compelled to have the seat of Newton government in "their" section of town, it was nicknamed "Squash End."

The old wives' tale about West Newton originated when the parish boundaries between the meeting house in Newton Centre and the West Parish were said to have landed in the middle of a large squash field, with the better part of the vegetable lying in the West Parish.

For much of its past, West Newton residents were in a power struggle with other villages over the location of the meetinghouse in the then rural community. As small congregations of people sprung up in areas of Newton other than those close to the meetinghouse in Newton Centre, they sought a more convenient location for their weekly services and town meetings.

In the "Tercentenary History of Newton," Henry Rowe stated: "When the first meetinghouse was built (in Newton Centre) there were probably only three farms in West Newton, those of John Fuller, Isaac Williams and Richard Park, but families had multiplied. About 1760 the inhabitants of that part of town seemed so far away that they began to plan for their own church."

By 1764, the 43 x 30 foot meetinghouse was completed, but the troubles for the West Newtonites were not over. Many of the residents of Auburndale, Newtonville, Nonantum and Lower Falls, in addition to those in West Newton, were still obliged to pay church rates to the First Church. Years of petitioning finally released them of this duty and, in 1778, the Massachusetts General Court officially recognized the Second Church as a separate parish.

Since it was the establishment of the First Church in Newton Centre that was the initial step to gaining independence from Cambridge, the same move in West Newton brought about some suspicion. Talk of splitting into two separate towns was commonplace during this time, and the rivalry between the two areas continued into the 19th century with discussion of the location of the town hall.

Before 1800, West Newton consisted of a few outlying farms, the burial ground at River Street, the church, a small grocery store and a tavern at the village center, all arranged around the old Natick Road, now Washington Street.

A few decades later, with Washington Street as a major route to Boston, the community became much less isolated. The village had grown to include about 30 houses, along Watertown, Waltham, Washington and Auburn streets. However, with a population too small to support its own business district, the commercial ventures were geared more toward travellers to Boston. One example of this was the Davis Hotel, which still stands today, at the intersection of Washington and Watertown streets. The hotel's owner, Seth Davis, was not only a proprietor, but also one of the city's leading schoolmasters, politicians, lecturers and naturalists.

Most memoriably, Davis, who had come to Newton in 1800, moved to the forefront of educational innovation when he introduced public speaking, geography and map drawing into the curriculum. Although school officials had accepted Davis' ideas on geography and map drawing, public speaking was not permitted to continue.

According to "The Mirror of Newton Present and Past," published by the Newton Federation of Women's Clubs in 1907, "Mr. Davis, ahead of his time in matters of school instruction, and of a naturally strong will, chafed under the limitations of such a short-sighted policy, and a few years later left the public work and established a private school of his own."

The Davis Academy attracted the sons of some of Newton's more prominent families, in addition to pupils from nearby Boston and faraway New York. Remembered as a stern disciplinarian, Davis taught many of the traditional subjects, as well as astronomy and science.

The school was originally located on Waltham Street, but was later moved to the old Fuller Academy and back to a new building near the site of the former Davis Elementary School.

The Fuller Academy, itself, seen as one of the first educational centers in the city, stood on the corner of Washington and Highland Streets, the present site of the Unitarian Church. After being constructed in 1830, the small temple-like structure housed the Fuller Academy, the Davis Academy, Horace Mann's experimental teacher training school, called the Normal School, and, after 1854, the West Newton English and Classical School, also called the Allen School.

Horace Mann, called the father of American public school education, brought the Framingham State Normal School from Lexington to West Newton, where it occupied the Fuller Academy from 1844 to 1853. The Normal School, named for the Ecole Normale Superiore - the produet of French educational reforms that took place under Napoleon - was an attempt to combat the poor quality that characterized most public school instruction in the first half of the 19th century.

Cyrus Pierce was the first principal at the Normal School, followed by Nathaniel Allen in 1848. It was at this model school for improving teaching methods that Allen developed many techniques that later made his school famous.

The West Newton English and Classical School, commonly called the Allen School, incorporated progressive techniques into the curriculum. The institution was co-educational and racially integrated, both in opposition to universal rules. Emphasis was placed on academic discipline, logical thought processes and enthusiasm. And learning took place outside, as well as inside, the classroom. For example, botany was taught in the spring when field trips could be taken and specimens gathered.

These institutions have given the City of Newton, as well as the village of West Newton, nationwide notoriety as a community in the forefront of education.

During the time all these schools were flourishing and bringing outsiders into West Newton, the railroad industry through the village boomed. The community's population nearly doubled between 1831 and 1848. The railroad provided even easier access to Boston than Washington Street.

Also at this time, the rise in population brought corresponding growth and, by 1855, the village had a fire station, train station, market, post office, a row of stores and artisan shops.

One of the most influential events that established West Newton in its own right occured when it became the center of local government. The West Parish meetinghouse was remodeled in 1848, and the town offices were moved there from Newton Centre. When Newton became a city in 1873, the structure remained in use as City Hall, until the present City Hall was built in the 1930s.

All the popularity surrounding the village brought a corresponding amount of interest by real estate developers. They recognized the marketability of the area and soon developed much of the land adjacent to the railroad tracks as house lots.

Both lifelong West Newton residents Eugene Cronin and Norrie Ford said the wide open spaces they recalled from their childhood no longer exist. "There are more houses now," Ford said, when asked what has changed in the village during her lifetime.

"It's changed completely in its appearance," former Alderman Cronin said, "There are no more open spaces," except the land occupied by the Brae Burn Country Club.

Cronin said that during his childhood, in the 1920s and '30s, "West Newton was a community of diverse shops. There was a blacksmith, a horse watering (station), hand laundries, bakery shops, five drug stores, several clothing shops, a butcher shop, a fish market, and two halls," he said as he strolled the streets in his mind. "And there was City Hall."

But, he explained, "The toll road extension tended to divide the village and eliminated many, many businesses ... It made it difficult to patronize the stores."

Resident Lillie Jefferson characterized her home village by saying the terrain of West Newton, with "the Hill" and the lower section of the village, has given rise to "differences within the area," which she translated to "a village of different people that have come together for a common cause."

When asked how she would describe West Newton, Ford simply said, "home ... It's changed, but with each change you meet somebody different." Apparently thinking her words had failed to express her obvious pride, she said, "I just can't put it into words."

(The week after next, the Graphic will explore the history behind Newtonville. There will not be a historical in next week's Graphic.)

Newton blacks once formed 'The Village'

In a small section of West Newton, one bound by Curve, Washington, Prospect, Auburn and several other streets which have disappeared, there once flourished a vital community of blacks called "The Village."

Centered around the Myrtle Baptist Church, this unique area of Newton is now all but gone. "The Village," essentially destroyed by the construction of the Massachusetts Turnpike, was home to what few black families sought to take roots in the suburbs of the north.

Although many came from as far away as the South and Midwest, drawn to Newton for its reputation as an abolitionist community, most of the black families that migrated to Newton hailed from Boston-area black neighborhoods in Charlestown and the back side of Beacon Hill.

What blacks resided in Newton in the earliest years were slaves from the West Indies who served the wealthy landowners. Founding father Edward Jackson is thought to have been one of the first slave holders.

But slavery in the Garden City was never very widespread. From 1681 to 1754, according to S.F. Smith's "The History of Newton," there were only 36 slaves declared on town records.

Many of the "Sable Sons of Africa," as Smith called them, took up arms in the War for Independence, and others were sent to serve for their masters. Military records show Pomp Jackson, one of the slaves for the Jacksons, as having enlisted on June 15, 1776, as a private who was later promoted to "fifer."

Slavery in Massachusetts was nearly eliminated by 1800, even though Abraham Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation did not come until much later. And Newtonites were in the forefront of the abolitionist movement, with Waverly Avenue resident John Kenrick serving as the first president of the first anti-slavery society in the United States.

One of the real prides of "The Village" was "a crackerjack baseball team," as lifelong West Newton Eugene Cronin recalled.

As stated in the "Tercentenary History of Newton," by Henry Rowe, "Newton was a station on the underground railroad, along which runaway slaves made their way to safety to Canada." He continues, "The Jackson homestead (which still stands on Washington Street today) was their rendezvous, where they arrived under cover of darkness, hid in the cellar, where a well was used to conceal them if they were pursued closely and when the way was clear, they were passed on by friendly hands to the next station."

In "King's Handbook of Newton," author M.F. Sweetser stated, "There is naturally a colony of negroes on the outskirts of the village (West Newton), which was in the old days one of the chief stations of the underground railroads ... The colored population of West Newton supports the vigorous and enthusiastic Myrtle Baptist Church, organized in 1874, with Rev. Edmund Kelley as pastor (in 1889)."

As in other areas of Newton at this time, much of the social, as well as spiritual, activities revolved around the church as a central meeting house. S.F. Smith described Myrtle Baptist as, "Characterized by vigor and enthusiasm, the church, though small, fills an important sphere and does its part well as a valuable helper in the cause of morality and religion."

Much of that feeling about the Myrtle Baptist is still alive today. Former Curve Street resident Lillie Jefferson, who works as secretary in the parish church, said, "It is a very important part of my life. It and the people have formed what I am today." She described its role in the community as "not only a place of worship, but it's a place to gather, in times of sorrow and joy, ... a place where you can shed the work-a-day things, among people who love you."

Even though many of the residents of "The Village" did not belong to Myrtle Baptist, the whole area contributed a great deal to the community on a whole. The Newton Community Development Society, Fair Housing, and Black Citizens of Newton all took root in the environment, according to Jefferson.

The most memorable lesson she learn as a member of the Myrtle Baptist Church was from 30-year pastor, Rev. Louis E. Ford. As a broommaker, "He taught entrepenuership — that you should not only be consumer all the time, but also be a provider." His philosophy, that you should "worship God with your will, and intellect," as well as soul, are words Jefferson said she tries to remember each day.

All sessions and events will be held in Gasson Hall 101 and the Rotunda on the Boston College main campus in Chestnut Hill. In addition, the "Roosevelt Special," a traveling exhibit of memorabilia, will be on the campus "Dustbowl" throughout the day.

NEWTON - An MBTA registration team will be at the Newton City Hall on Thursday, Oct. 25, to issue identification cards permitting senior citizens and handicapped persons to ride MBTA rapid transit lines and local buses for reduced rates. With the cards senior citizens may ride rapid transit lines and local buses for $.10 at all times. Special Needs cards are valid during off-peak hours only and allow the bearer to ride any $.60 subway route or $.50 bus route for $.10. If the fare exceeds that amount, the cardholders pay half fare.

Eligible citizens from Newton and surrounding towns will be able to register between the hours of 9:30 a.m. and 2:30 p.m.

To be eligible for a senior citizen reduced fare identification card, which contains the name and address of the holder and a color photograph for positive identification, senior citizens must bring proof of age to be 65 years or older, residency, and a $.50 cash fee.

Medicare cards will not be accepted as proof of age.

The MBTA stressed that senior citizens who already have a reduced fare identification card do not need to register again.

Police log

Youth arrested for lewdness

CHESTNUT HILL — A 16-year-old Newton youth was arrested last week for open and gross lewdness after he allegedly exposed himself to several women at the Chestnut Hill MBTA Station, police said.

The youth was scheduled to face juvenile court proceedings at Newton District Court for the alleged offense.

He was arrested shortly after 8 p.m. on Monday when a Hammond Street woman called police to report that a man was repeatedly exposing himself in an indecent manner to passing female pedestrians at the Chestnut Hill MBTA Station, police said.

The youth, allegedly naked from the waist down, reportedly jumped from a set of bushes several times.

When police arrived, the suspect fled and was apprehended about 20 yards down along the trolley tracks, police said.

DWI arraignment for Waltham woman

NEWTON — A 50-year-old Waltham woman was arraigned in Newton District Court for allegedly driving drunk last Monday night when her car struck a parked pick-up truck in front of an Adams Street home.

Ruth T. Connors, of 30A Amory Rd., pleaded innocent to driving under the influence, leaving the scene of an accident and operating after license revocation.

She is due back in court Oct. 19 for a pre-trial conference.

Police said she was arrested shortly after 8:30 p.m. after her 1973 Chevrolet Impala struck the rear of a pick-up truck and then fled the scene.

The truck's owner, who allegedly heard the crash outside his home, followed the woman's car until she finally came to a stop about one-quarter of a mile from the scene of the accident, police said.

Man finds gun in his car

WEST NEWTON — A puzzled resident told police last week he found a loaded .22 caliber handgun inside his car where there had been none before.

The gun, an Iver Johnson model, was found by the owner of a car left parked at the Adams Street municipal lot, lying on the floor near the driver's seat. The weapon was promptly turned over to police.

"The man who found the gun apparently had no idea who put it there," a Newton police spokeswoman said.

5 cars have windows shot out

NEWTON CENTRE — Five cars parked in the Newton Centre area were vandalized last week when their windows were shot out with what appeared to be BB gun pellets, police said.

The damage to the cars — three on Jackson Street and two on Beethoven Avenue — reportedly occurred between 8:15 p.m. and 10:30 p.m., police said.

Police found a BB pellet in the front window of a Mazda RX7 parked on Jackson Street and a pellet hole in the windshield of a 1984 Volkswagon Rabbit parked on Beethoven Avenue.

Police believe shattered windows on the other cars were caused by the same pellet gun.

Armed men attempt to rob Bloomie's

CHESTNUT HILL — Two armed men attempted to rob the Bloomingdale's jewelry department Friday morning by sticking up an employee there, but fled the store when another salesperson happened upon the scene, police said.

Police are searching for two men who allegedly walked into the jewelry department at about 10:15 a.m. and asked a female employee to show them a particular ring, then pulled a small, silver handgun, saying, "This is a stick-up."

The shaken woman then dropped the keys to the jewelry case onto the floor at the same time another salesman walked onto the scene, causing the confused robbers to flee the store, police said.

The men were seen jumping into a dark blue car, which fled out of the Boylston Street parking lot and headed west along Rt. 9, police said.

Lasell students flashed by man

AUBURNDALE — An unidentifed man allegedly exposed himself Sunday night to three Lasell Junior College students walking along Woodland Road, police said.

The incident occurred shortly before midnight, when three Lasell students walking to their dormitories from the Woodland MBTA Station were confronted by a man who indecently exposed himself, police said.

The man was described as white with brown hair, about 20 years old, slim build, wearing a white sweatshirt and green pants.

The driver of the car, William F. Burke, 76, of Crescent St., was not injured, records show.

Part of North closed after vandals strike

By Eric Fehrnstrom
Staff Writer

NEWTON — School officials Monday closed off a vandalized portion of Newton North High School while workers cleaned up an estimated $25,000 worth of water damage.

Police said nine classrooms, three corridors and more than 15 offices and storage rooms were damaged over the weekend by vandals who plugged up a fourth floor sink inside the art department and turned both faucets on full-force.

The faucets were left running for an undetermined amount of time before police discovered water cascading down from a fourth floor window at the Barry House early Sunday morning.

The full extent of the damage will not be known for several days.

For the School Department, the vandalism marks the second occasion in less than three months where portions of the Lowell Avenue school building have suffered water damage due to either negligence or criminal mischief.

"It's distressing," said Vincent Silluzio, asst. superintendent for operations and planning.

Silluzio said books, materials, ceiling tiles and carpeting suffered varying degrees of injury as a result of the incident. In addition, six industrial arts machines located in the basement were damaged.

"We are going to take steps in the future to see that things like this won't happen again," he said.

In late July, rooms on three levels of Barry House were damaged by water that leaked from a ruptured hose in the same art room. City officials allege workers from a Brookline asbestos-removal company were responsible for the leakage.

Not everyone, however, can be reached in time and those citizens who would like to attend or purchase a ticket may do so by contacting Sergaant Roman in the Chief's Office, 552-7258.

South rebounds at Concord

By Mike Stoller
Sports Correspondent

CONCORD -- There was no need to do anything but what they usually do: run, run and run. That's what the Newton South football Lions did on Saturday afternoon when they pummeled a hapless Concord-Carlisle team, 34-14, and won their first Dual County League contest of the season.

The Lion backfield tandem of Kevin Rollins and Darvell Huffman combined for 256 rushing yards and continued to show why it is perhaps the most feared tailback team in the DCL.

Rollins led the potent offensive attack, gaining a remarkable 171 yards on 32 carries and scoring three touchdowns. The star running back has rushed for 646 yards, including 11 touchdowns (he has also caught a TD pass), on the season and averages 5.7 yards per carry.

Huffman, meanwhile, has done an outstanding job using his great mobility to tear apart opposing defenses. The senior sensation gained 86 yards, including two touchdowns on the afternoon.

The Lions bolted to a 34-0 halftime lead and South coach Art Kojoyian accepted the win graciously by not running up the score in the second half.

"We weren't going to rub it in," said Kojoyian. "I was satisfied," with his team's 20-point win.

And he had reason to be. The Lions drew first blood on the opening drive of the game and never looked back. From his own 39 Huffman broke loose for a 14-yard gain and a first down. Then Rollins did the bulk of the work, muscling his way thorugh for 27 yards on five carries and putting the Lions deep into Patriot territory. The 61-yard drive ended in poetic justice with Rollins scoring on a 12-yard TD toss from South quarterback Steve Altman. The conversion failed but Newton led, 6-0.

On the ensuing possession the Lion defense stopped C-C cold on four plays and then sacked the punter for 11 yards on a snap he couldn't handle. The South offense took over on the home team's 21 and wasted little time in scoring.

It took only five running plays for Newton to cross the goalline. Again the dynamic duo of Rollins and Huffman ran through the Patriot defense as if it was thin air. Rollins plowed into the end zone from four yards out, scoring his second TD of the day and giving South a comfortable 12-0 lead. The Lions added two more when Altman hit (you guessed it) Rollins on the conversion.

Rollins checked in with his third touchdown on an eight-yard scamper in the opening minute of the second period. Most of the drive, however, took place in the first quarter when Rollins, Huffman, Altman and teammate Derryck Harrell -- who also contributed three interceptions on defense -- picked apart the Patriot defense.

Newton had the ball on its own 28. After Altman hooked up with Rollins for a 15-yard pass to open up the drive, South used its ground game effectively, marching to the Patriot 18. Then Rollins ran for seven and three yards respectively before breaking loose for eight more and putting the Lions on top, 20-0. The conversion failed.

The Patriots simply couldn't do anything on offense in the first half. On their next possession they had the ball for only one play before Harrell came through with his first interception of the game. The senior picked off the C-C pass at his own 41 before running it back 28 yards to the Patriot 31. The stage was set for Newton South once again.

The Lions were quick to capitalize on the crucial C-C turnover. Altman spotted Huffman for a short gain before the latter eluded several tacklers on a couple of "razzle-dazzle" moves and put his team on the Patriot 12. Huffman ran for nine more before he befittingly capped the drive on a three-yard breakthrough. He also ran for the conversion to up Newton's lead to 28-0.

Concord's Liam Colleran ran the South kick back 16 yards to his own 30 but South's stingy "D" rose to the occasion again as tackle Seth Oliver sacked Patriot quarterback John Francini for a five-yard loss on a second-and-ten situation. Concord got 11 back on the ensuing pass play but was forced to punt, facing fourth and four on its own 36. Newton was quick to respond.

The Lions gained six first downs on a 76-yard drive that featured the South ground game at its best. Rollins rushed for 44 of those yards while Huffman ran for 19 more and completed the South scoring on a four-yard touchdown scamper. The Lions expanded their lead to 34-0.

Harrell made his second interception on the last play of the quarter to complete a solid Lion first half. "Harrell did a hell of a job," said Kojoyian, referring to his defensive star's outstanding play. "What did he have, three interceptions?"

Indeed he did. His last one came in the third quarter after Concord passed for its initial first down of the game. On a second-and-long situation Patriot quarterback Chip Twitty (Concord used three QBs in the game) launched the 30-yard pass that Harrell promptly picked off at his own 35.

Concord finally put some points on the scoreboard in the fourth quarter. Chris Graham (68 yards on eight carries) found a hole and ran 45 yards around left end for a touchdown. Greg Mueller also contributed to the three-play, 84-yard drive. On the preceding play, from his own 20, he broke up the middle for 35 yards, putting Concord in South territory. The conversion was successful and the score was 34-8.

On the ensuing kickoff C-C recovered a fumble on the South 25. Six plays later Graham tallied for his second TD of the game on a one-yard plunge to close out the scoring.

The Lions (4-1, 1-1 in the DCL) will go for their second league win and fifth overall when they play host to Bedford on Saturday at 1:30.

Suburban League soccer

Tigers drub Quincy to remain close 3rd

Newton North booters stayed close on the heels of the Suburban League front runners by pumelling Quincy, 11-0, at the Newton North Field. Artie Aaron and Don Natale each scored a pair of goals to lead the Tiger assault. Newton North is in third place, a point behind runner-up Waltham and two points behind first place Cambridge-Rindge.

"We really worked on the passing game," said Coach Roger Brown, "and everybody got a lot of playing time."

Natale and Aaron combined on the opening goal eight minutes into the game. Natale sprinted down the left wing and took a pass from Aaron and fired high to the right side from the 18-yard line.

On the second goal, Eli Berg scored from Jim Donovan. Junior Brian Scales got the assist on the third, as his corner kick was headed in by Aaron. Striker Peter Bourland completed the first half scoring on a feed from midfield.

Aaron scored 12 minutes into the second half on a pass from Scales, while Natale scored his second two minutes later from Bourland.

Nick Collier scored the seventh goal on a pass from Chuck Hatem while Mike Thomas convertd a Collier pass for number eight. Ed O'Brien, Jim Ellman and Steve Fisch all picked up single tallies to end the scoring.

"We were frustrated in the loss to Waltham," said Brown, "but I think we completely outmanned them today."

Gary Scott, David Vento and Adam Aronson split the duties in goal for the Tigers. Now 7-3-1, North has a key game at Brockton on Wednesday. "We can stay in the pack with that one," said Brown. "After Brockton we've got Cambridge and it would be nice to be knocking on the door when we go over."

On Friday at Waltham, the Hawks managed to come from behind to earn a 3-1 win in a showdown with Newton North in a league game on Friday.

"It was a crazy game," said Waltham coach John Graceffa, and his opposite number, Roger Brown, would heartily agree. Two Waltham scores were called back, while the Hawks' first two goals were protested by Newton.

The Tigers took an early lead in the game, as Peter Bourland scored at the 25 minute mark. Andy Shaver intercepted the ball at midfield, and chipped it right over the defense to Bourland. He made a half volley from 25 yards out for the lead.

The Hawks, down 1-0 at the half, came into the second half fired up. "They're well coached, and really came out enthusiastic," credited Brown.

Early in the half, Waltham's Fred Romaine blasted a host off the post. The ball teetered on the line and Marcello Joniaux knocked it in. The goal was hotly contested by Newton, but it stood. After that, the momentum was on the Hawks' side.

"That was the worst goal I've ever seen," said Brown.

About two minutes later, Fred Romaine got the gamewinner in much the same fashion. Brown said that Romaine was "clearly offsides" but the call wasn't made, and the score was 2-1, Waltham.

With two minutes left in the game, Jim Kramer cut away from the pack for a breakaway and put it in for the final 3-1 score.

"It was a good comeback win for us," said Graceffa. "Down 1-0 to a good team, we really came on in the second half. They had the edge in the first half, but we really got the momentum with that tying goal."

Tiger frosh roll over North Quincy

NEWTON -- The Tiger freshman football team rolled to a 24-0 victory over North Quincy on Thursday behind Al Clark's 14 points. The Newton North running back/noseguard scored on runs of 3 and 13 yards and also recorded a safety with a quarterback sack in the North Quincy end zone.

The winners got a pair of scores in the first quarter and cruised from there. Milt Britton broke a 12-yard run and Joe Proia got the two extra points with a dive off right tackle.

Clark then hit paydirt with a three-yard run behind Jim Barshears and Jim Halloran. In the second quarter, the only scoring was on Clark's safety.

Britton set up the third quarter score with a 33-yard run. Clark went in from 13 yards out behind Mike Barshears and Dan Cedrone. Dennis Rohana caught the conversion pass from Scott Lenon to end the scoring.

Ball's TD tosses pace Auburndale

NEWTON -- Pat Ball tossed a pair of touchdown passes to lead Auburndale Cafe over Walsh Construction, 13-6, in Newton Men's Touch Football League action on Monday at Albemarle Field.

Walsh scored first on a 10-yard pass from Pat Barry to Tom Walsh, but the winners came storming back in the second half.

From his own 15 yardline, Pat Ball tossed 20 yards to Jerry McHugh, who ran the remaining 65 for the score. Jim Capello hauled in the conversion pass from Ball for the 7-6 lead.

An interception by Jim McHale set up the second score, as Ball threw a 20-yard strike to Brett Annese. With a minute to go, a drive by Walsh was ended when Ed Asaley intercepted a pass to end the game. It was the second of the game for the winners as Dave Donahue picked off one near the end of the first half.

Offensively, Jim Cappello made a few key first down receptions for the winners while Jackie Keefe rushed the passer well to spark the defense.

Auburndale is now 5-2.

Newton North still can't stop run

By Roy LeBlanc

MALDEN — The Newton North Tigers are going to have trouble winning as long they continue to play Georgia to the opposition's General Sherman. This weekend, the Tigers spent another Saturday watching a team control the ball and march up and down the field on the ground, with the result being a 34-14 loss to Malden.

The Golden Tornadoes, aided by a couple of big mistakes on North's part, built a 26-0 lead with 5:35 left in the first half.

The Malden strategy was simple: run the ball and dare Newton to do anything about it. The Tigers seemed more or less helpless against the onslaught, at least until it was too late.

The Tornadoes had "more weapons," as Newton coach Peter Capodilupo put it, and used all of them. Reggie Hayes wound up with the best numbers on the day, rushing for 136 yards and two touchdowns on only 12 carries. Hayes had plenty of help, though, as folks like Paul Demayo, John Zimmerman and Chris Finn softened up the Newton line.

The Tornadoes gained 296 yards on the ground, that on the heels of the 300-plus that North Quincy racked up last week.

With that kind of ground game, Malden quarterback Steve Monaco didn't have to throw that much, but he saved the pass for when he needed it most, as his only two completions went for touchdowns to co-captain Dan Valeri.

The Tornadoes scored four of the first five times they got their hands on the ball, putting the contest out of reach early. Two of those scores came as the direct result of Newton turnovers, which Capodilupo cited as a key to the contest.

"Offensively we hurt ourselves and never recovered," said the Tiger mentor. "That put us out of the game almost before it started."

Malden showed what kind of day it was going to be on the first drive of the game, when it took the ball on its own 34 and marched 66 yards on 10 plays.

Demayo (12), Zimmerman (15) and Hayes (14) all ripped off long gainers on the drive, which was capped by Monaco's four-yard toss to Valeri with 7:14 to go in the game.

Newton's ensuing possession lasted exactly one play, as Geoff Drew fumbled the ball away to Malden's Chris Delling on the Newton 20. The Tigers managed to hang tough that time, but the next three times the Tornadoes got the ball, they found paydirt.

Mark Adams scored initial TD for Tigers

The second TD came after another time-consuming drive that covered 54 yards. Zimmerman finished off that one with 35 seconds left in the stanza when he dove over the middle of the line.

The killing blows came in the opening moments of the second period. Quarterback Rusty Halloran's pass went in and out of Rich Claflin's hands and into the mitts of Finn at the North 41. After a sack by John Flynn drove the Tornadoes back to their own 48, Hayes got the call and it was off to the races. He covered 52 yards by running around the left end, which was vulnerable all afternoon.

Hayes turned in a 10-yarder later in the period before the Tigers cracked the scoreboard after a nice march late in the half.

That drive covered 67 yards in 13 plays as Mark Adams took a pitch and went around the left side for the score with 31 seconds left. Chris Rutan's toss to Claflin made it 26-8, but the Tornadoes didn't really feel threatened.

The second half featured one touchdown apiece for the teams. Malden scored with 7:14 to go in the third period on a 17-yard Monaco-to-Valeri connection.

Newton answered in the fourth quarter when backup quarterback Kevin McGrath found junior varsity receiver David Gates alone in the end zone from 20 yards out.

The score could have perhaps been worse, but Malden coach Paul Finn mercifully substituted early and often once his team was in control.

Both coaches agreed that the difference in the teams was simply talent.

"They didn't do one thing we didn't expect them to do," said Capodilupo. "Defensively we just weren't as tough as we wanted to be."

"They just weren't big enough up front," said Finn.

Ironically, Capodilupo was more pleased after this contest than after last week's 18-6 loss to North Quincy. In that contest, the coach felt his team lacked emotion, but he thought the Tigers got it back on Saturday.

"I couldn't be disheartened," he said. "We played with more emotion and hit better...We've got the emotional part of our game back. Now we have to take care of the technical aspect."

The coach singled out Greg Larson on offense, who was playing his first game at tackle after being an end most of the season. Defensively, Capodilupo thought nose guard John Morrissey and tackle Scott Hamblett played well.

Unfortunately, the Tigers also got banged up in the physical contest. Morrissey and Drew both hurt their shoulders, while Britt Ryan suffered a pulled hamstring. All are questionable for Saturday's home game versus Leominster (3-2).

"We're better than we were a week ago," said Capodilupo, referring to the emotional level, not the health, of his team. "We still have half our season ahead of us...We can still correct our mistakes and get better."

Fans are wowed by Al Mastroianni's 'ace'

WEST NEWTON — Al Mastroianni, recently retired from the city's Parks and Recreation Department, has been shocking his old friends lately with the news that he scored an official, certified hole-in-one on the third hole at Newton-Commonwealth Golf Course.

Normally quiet and reserved, Mastroianni has been regaling West Newtonites with every single detail of what many of his closest friends have been calling "a miracle."

"I used my 5-wood," he said, leading into the story. "I'm never going to get rid of that club. That club's going to go down in history."

Mastroianni, who has a history of referring to his golf balls as "dogs," since they head for the trees whenever they are given a chance, blasted a straight shot off the third tee. It just barely cleared the front edge of the elevated green, according to his partner and expert witness, local golf empresario "Honest John" McAuliffe.

McAuliffe said both he and Mastroianni thought, at first, that the ball had gone way past the green. Only after they searched for it up to the tree line did Mastroianni have the nerve to go look in the cup.

Mastroianni said his accomplisment became official when he received a "hole-in-one" pin and a letter of certification from the Boston Globe. That letter, which he showed to all his friends, looked like it was 50 years old in a matter of days.

Hospital race prizes go to 18 Newton residents

NEWTON — No less than 18 Newton residents took home prizes for finishing in the top three of their division in the recent Newton-Wellesley Hospital "Feel Fit Road Race."

Topping the list was Jonathan Waldron, 36, who grabbed first in the Open Male Division in the 7.3-mile race. The day's events also included a 3.65-mile competition. Paul McCallum, 28, was third behind Waldron.

Over on the female side, Sharon Barbano, 31, was first in the Open Division.

Newton residents also did well in the Masters Division. Joseph McCusker, 42, was second for the men, while Diana Walsh, 40, and Nina Morse, 41, were second and third for the women.

First and second went to area runners in the Juniors Female Division. Marie Gentile, 17, took the top spot, with Stephanie Simon, 14, second.

For the males, Tommy Morse, 15, captured third place.

The 3.65-mile race also saw area runners do quite well, taking first in four divisions.

In the Masters Female, Martha Richmond, 43, was first, and Martha Campbell, 41, was third.

Tara Feeney, 15, and Magda Kornitzer, 14, took the top two places in the Juniors Female grouping.

First place also went to Newton residents in both the male and female 12-and-under divisions. Robert Chernis, 11, was first for the boys, with Miriam Kornitzer, 11, likewise for the girls.

Gary Kunkel, 31, was third in the Open Male Division, while Noel Estes, 34, finished second for the women.

Third place in the Junior Male Division went to Keith Wittenberg, 16.

The races were sponsored by Roche Brothers Super Markets and were presented by Newton-Wellesley Hospital's occupational health program, Health at Work.

Approximately 500 runners competed. Proceeds will be used to renovate the hospital's waiting room for families of patients in the Intensive Care Unit and the Cardiac Care Unit.

Among the firms donating prizes were: Olkens Department Store; W.L. Gore, Medical Division; Legal Seafoods and Pro-Keds.

North girls run record to 11-0

QUINCY — The Newton North girls' soccer team is still rolling, and remains undefeated after a 5-0 win over Quincy on Monday. Five different girls scored for the Tigers as Fuzzy Howland's squad dominated play, outshooting the losers, 35-1.

Kristin Hughes got the eventual winner on a pass from Tina Rosenthal two minutes into the game. Marian Meehan headed in a pass from Carol Ventura five minutes later for a 2-0 lead.

Rebecca Locke scored from 25 yards out on a pass from Ventura, while Ellen Shapiro knocked in another long shot with two minutes left in the half and Newton led 4-0.

In the second half, Susie Nguyen scored the only Tiger goal as Howland substituted freely. Her goal came on a pass from Cheryl Hager five minutes into the half.

"This really gave us a chance to work on some things after the win over Waltham on Friday," said Howland.

Liz Speliotis went the distance between the posts for the shutout. Now 11-0, Newton North hosts Brockton on Wednesday.

The North girls had a more difficult time getting past Waltham, 2-0, on Friday.

The game was that close only due to the heroic efforts of Hawk goalie Christine Hassell, who played extremely well in defeat. The Tigers fired 43 shots, while the Hawks managed only 10.

Newton started and ended the scoring for the day within 12 minutes.

Before five had passed, Tina Rosenthal fed Kristin Hughes, who put the ball into the top right corner of the net.

Six minutes later, Carolyn Natale tallied on a great effort. The junior took a pass from senior co-captain Jackie Kinsella at midfield and raced all the way in for a shot. Hassell made a great save, but the ball bounced right back out in front and Natale was there to take the rebound and put it into the top corner.

South blanked

Junior co-captain Leslie Davidson scored two goals and assisted on the third as Weston took a 3-0 decision over Newton South in a Dual County League game on Friday.

Davidson ripped the first goal into the upper corner from her spot on the right wing. She tallied an insurance goal on a penalty shot in the second half, and capped the day by assisting on Nicole Kondi's second-half goal. Missy Long also picked up an assist on that score.

Junior goalie Stacy LeBaron posted her fifth shutout of the season.

Despite surrendering the two goals after the intermission, Newton coach Charlie Hurwitz thought his club outplayed the Wildcats in the second half.

Lancer volleyballers bounce back

NEWTON — The Lancers are back in stride after suffering their first loss of the season. On Friday, Newton Catholic defeated North Cambridge Catholic at home, 2-0. Rose Bertucci's squad lost a chance at an undefeated season with a 2-1 loss to Ursuline Academy on Thursday.

Bertucci, who teaches at North Cambridge, praised the play of Shari Calabro, Joanne Abruzzi, as well as Kerry MacDougall. Judy Jackson and Angela Bove provided good spiking while Cheryl Chagnon's passing and Angela Canty came off the bench to play well.

Newton South spiked

The Lions suffered a 2-0 loss at Boston Latin on Friday with a 15-5, 15-3 loss.

"They improved a lot, but I think we're going to try to simplify things a little. Everyone is working but the kids are more concerned with where they are then what they're doing," said Coach Judy Kennedy.

Tigers top Lions

The Newton North volleyball squad defeated the Lions of Newton South, 2-0, at North on Wednesday. The individual game scores were 15-6, 15-7.

"We controlled the match," said coach Jay Cradle, who cited the consistent play of Joanna Gidden and Wendy Rogers as keys to the first game. Beth Morahan contributed strong spiking in both games, while Niki Cradle was strong at the net in the second game. Diane Goldstein and Laura Slamin also turned in strong efforts for the Tigers.

Youth pro Musica to highlight Party Day

NEWTON – Youth pro Musica will be among the featured attractions of this year's Party Day, Oct. 24, a fund-raising event sponsored by the Newton-Wellesley Hosptial Aid Association.

Youth pro Musica, under the direction of Robert Humez, is a chorus featuring some of the most gifted young singers in the Commonwealth and has, for the third year, received a Merit Award from the Massachusetts Council on the Arts.

The music program begins at 2 p.m. and will take place at Allen Riddle Hall on the grounds of Newton-Wellesley Hospital.

In addition to the concert many other exciting parties are being planned at Aid members' homes throughout the Newton-Wellesley area.

Prior to the performance, the Wellesley Hills Quilters will present a special quilt to Newton-Wellesley Hospital. The handmade quilt consists of squares depicting significant events during the Aid's 100th year association with the hospital.

According to Mrs. William Waterman, Party Day chairperson, this year the association has elected to increase its contribution from $10,000 to $15,000. This donation will be used to expand and redesign the Ambulatory Oncology Center. The proceeds from Party Day will be used toward this goal.

Loretta Morrell, 58

Worked at Newton-Wellesley Hospital

WEST NEWTON — Loretta (Cedrone) Morrell, a part-time cashier at the Newton-Wellesley Hospital Coffee Shop, died suddenly on Oct. 12 at the Newton-Wellesley Hospital. She was 58.

A lifelong resident of Newton, she was the daughter of Angelina (Carthrcchia) Cedrone and the late Alesandro Cedrone.

She is also survived by her husband Robert J. Morrell; two daughters, Mrs. Walter (Mary Ellen) Hansen of Wrentham and Mrs. David (Roberta) Fraine of Cocoa Beach, Fla.; and one son, Donald A. Morrell of Sharon. She was the sister of Mrs. Pompeo (Christine) Gentile, Ambrose and Gladinaro "Glady" Cedrone, all of Newton and Loreto Cedrone of Watertown and the late Daniel A. Cedrone. She is also survived by three grandchildren.

Funeral services were held from the Andrew J. Magni Funeral Home, Newton on Tuesday followed by a funeral mass in Our Lady Help of Christian's Church. In lieu of flowers, remembrances in Loretta's name may be made to the Children's Hospital, 300 Longwood Ave., Boston, 02130. Interment at Calvary Cemetery in Waltham.

Providence restauranteur to operate Valle's in Newton

One of New England's most celebrated restaurants moved into town recently under unusual but very promising circumstances for area residents.

Vincenzo Iemma, noted restaurateur and owner of Providence's highly acclaimed Capriccio restaurant, has announced that he has assumed the operation of the popular Valle's Steak House on Route 9 in Newton, effective Oct. 2.

Iemma explained that the Valle's location was recently acquired by The Downing Corporation, a respected Providence-based real estate firm, for future development.

Rather than see the area landmark abandoned, Downing officials approached Iemma with the opportunity to continue its operation, and he quickly agreed.

"Capriccio has always had a strong and loyal following in this area," Iemma explained. "We've been thinking about opening a new restaurant here for several years. This is a temporary situation, but it's a unique opportunity to get a first-hand feel for the area and the people."

Iemma is quick to add, however, that only a sprinkling of the gourmet Capriccio fare which has found its way onto the pages of Bon Apetit, Gourmet, Food & Wine, Cuisine, and other national publications and "recommended" lists over the years will be served at the Valle's location...for the time being, at least.

Those new Italian specialties include a variety of imported pastas and milk-fed veal dishes, as well as steaks, chicken, and seafoods, prepared with an Italian flare. Prices will be reasonable, too, Iemma insured.

Taking a bite out of crime

By Kevin C. Kennedy
News Editor

NEWTON — Police and city officials joined members of the Newton Crime Prevention Commission in the mayor's office last week to honor several residents who went out of their way, during the past year, to assist the Police Department in taking a bite out of crime.

Receiving the Commission's "Good Citizen Award" at the ceremony were a young lady whose early morning phone call last December gave firefighters the jump they needed to avert real tragedy at a fire that consumed Bunny's Market, on River Street. Also given the "Good Citizen Award" were an elderly Thompsonville resident who assisted police in putting the collar on two fleeing burglary suspects, and two young men who saw a hit-and-run accident accident in West Newton Square, caught the driver of the car and delivered him to the police.

Linda LaCroix had just awakened to go to work, at 5 a.m., Dec. 17, when she heard glass breaking and saw a fire raging inside Bunny's Market. Police Chief William F. Quinn said of LaCroix's phone call to the Fire Department, "Most awards are given for a direct heroic action. However, many times that all-important call or notification becomes the difference between life and death. In this case, just a couple of minutes delay could have produced a great tragedy."

City to pay $60,000 in Mann legal fees

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The aldermanic Finance Committee Monday night unanimously approved an appropriation from surplus of nearly $60,000 to pay the legal fees incurred during two law suits brought against Mayor Theodore D. Mann.

The committee's decision marked the first appropriation ever tentatively approved under the city's indemnification ordinance, the validity of which was upheld by the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court in an unanimous August ruling.

FinCom ignored requests that the payment be delayed until a final legal decision is reached regarding the charges against Mann and voted 7-0 to pay the mayor's current $59,792.08 bill, sending the item on to the Board of Aldermen for final deliberations during its Nov. 5 session.

Over two-thirds of the fees represent Boston attorney Edward J. Barshak's three years and two months of successful work defending the city's indemnification ordinance against a challenge brought by 14 taxpayers, while the remainder is the city's current debt to Barshak for his on-going defense of Mann against a civil rights suit brought by the mayor's former secretary, Diane L. Ossinger, who resides here.

During his appearance before FinCom, Barshak, who is a member of the Sugarman, Rogers, Barshak & Cohen law firm, agreed to answer questions about his work for Mann as long as he did not jeopardize the still-pending Ossinger case.

Asked when he thought there might be a resolution to Ossinger's three-and-a-half-year-old claim that Mann violated her civil rights by firing her without due process, Barshak said, "I don't want to give anything away. Let me just say that I have good reason to believe that in another two months something significant will happen in that suit. The groundwork has already been laid."

He also told aldermen that there had been "a certain amount of negotiations" with Ossinger's attorney, Thomas J. Troy, prior to the first trial in the taxpayers' suit, which achieved a "general sense of what economics were required to settle" her claim out of court. However, the "conversation ended because (Ossinger) wouldn't follow (Troy's) advice," Barshak added.

Asked if he had found out what happened to the money Ossinger allegedly received from cashing the mayor's paychecks, Barshak replied, "I hope to dispose of the case before having to."

Vincent Filippone, the Newton Centre businessman who headed up the unsuccessful taxpayers' suit, cautioned FinCom against an outright approval of Barshak's bill, claiming the indemnification ordinance provides for payment of fees incurred only in

Independent voters

Primarily for GOP

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — If the Sept. 18 primary results unlocked last week are any indication, a majority of the city's independent voters will cast Republican ballots when they go to the polls for the upcoming presidential and senatorial races.

Of the 17,041 unenrolled voters registered for last month's primary battle, 4,831, or 28 percent, came to the polls to switch their affiliation to one of the two major parties and 52 percent of them voted Republican.

If the trend displayed in the primary is carried over into the upcoming election, independents will play a key role as a swing vote for Republican candidates involved in closely-contested races.

The voting lists used in the primary became available when the 30-day "lock-up" period required by state law expired. Independents here represent the city's second largest voting block behind registered Democrats, while the number of registered Republicans trails far behind both.

The voting lists show that unenrolled switchovers accounted for a whopping 50 percent of all Republican ballots cast and 18 percent of all Democratic ballots seen in the primary.

Tailgaters still plague Chestnut Hill

By Richard Nangle

CHESTNUT HILL — Boston College football fans continued to hold tailgate parties at the Eagles home games causing anguish for area residents, according to the president of the Chestnut Hill Association.

But Lawrence Barton, director of community relations at BC said the problems were few and "surprising to us."

A capacity crowd entered Alumni Stadium last Saturday to watch the top ranked Eagles beat Temple 24-10. Before the game fans participated in the age-old ritual of barbecuing and beer drinking on the streets and lawns surrounding the school.

"The premise is our neighborhood is a parking lot for the football game and that just shouldn't be," Dr. Nancy Friedman said.

Friedman said the Chestnut Hill Association has contacted the college about the problem, but should not be put in the position of calling the police.

"Hot stuff, coming through!" shouts one apron-clad man holding a tray of steaming edibles. He weaves through a whir of kitchen action, sending two co-workers darting for safety, and the meal preparation continues without disruption.

About seven students work through the morning. Tomato sauce fumes mingle with the clanging of pots and pans, filling the hallways and classrooms of Newton's Learning Prep School (LPS) with the promise of lunchtime.

Like the other 200 students enrolled in the private, non-profit school, Izzo has a learning disability related to processing language. But despite difficulties in expressing themselves or understanding others, almost every LPS student graduates with a full-time, paying job.

14 aldermen endorse lone ballot question

By Suzanne M. Dulude
Asst. News Editor

NEWTON — Garnering endorsements has been the prime focus of the campaign for the sole Newton ballot question during the final weeks before the Nov. 6 election.

The Central American Referendum, which essentially calls for an end to all funds and military aid to El Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala and Nicaragua, has received the okay from over half of the 24 members of the Board of Alderman.

"I am in favor of what the referendum calls for," Ward 2 Alderman-at-Large Louis Irwin, one of 14 the endorsers said. "Foreign policy in the region has been misguided and counter-productive ... The problem is not the type our military aid can solve."

The non-binding referendum, which will appear on the ballot in 39 representative districts in Massachusetts, including all of Newton and the 10th District in Waltham, states: "Shall the representative from this district be instructed to vote in favor of a resolution calling on the U.S. Congress and the President of the United States to: immediately withdraw all troops and advisors from El Salvador and Honduras; to stop any and all military aid to El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala; and to stop any and all aid to the forces fighting to overthrow the government of Nicaragua and to direct the funds now used for such purposes to the

Lawyers say

Attempts to link suits hiked costs

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Unsuccessful attempts to connect Diane L. Ossinger's civil rights claim to a taxpayers' suit challenging the city's indemnification ordinance helped to create the $60,000 legal bill that will cost each taxpayer here about 72 cents, according to the city's top legal official and the mayor's private attorney.

City Solicitor Daniel Funk and Boston attorney Edward J. Barhsak both told the aldermanic Finance Committee Monday night that local attorney Arthur J. Goldsmith's attempts to link the taxpayers' suit to Ossinger's claim that Mann fired her without due process caused significant additional legal costs for the city.

However, Vincent Filippone, who led the taxpayers' challenge, denied there was a "deliberate attempt to try the case in a malicious manner."

FinCom eventually approved the payment of Barshak's $59,792.08 legal bill, two-thirds of which resulted from the taxpayers' suit. The remainder represents his current bill for defending Mayor Theodore D. Mann against Ossinger's suit, which is still pending in Middlesex Superior Court.

Barshak decsribed Ossinger's claim as "a straightforward civil suit," but called the unsuccessful taxpayers' suit, which challenged the city's right to protect from financial loss public officials involved in civil rights claims, a "somewhat jaundiced, stalking horse."

"It was, by its allegations, attempting to show a whole maelstrom of malice and malicious acts that were not alleged in her suit ... From the beginning to the end, my interest was to see that the taxpayers' suit was not misused for that purpose," he told aldermen.

In a memo to the committee, Funk said, "The legal bill has escalated considerably, primarily as a result of the taxpayers' lawsuit and appeals. Had the taxpayers not appealed the Superior Court's (initial) decision (against their claim), Mr. Barshak's current bill would only be slightly higher that his initial bill of $13,624.29."

Funk told FinCom that "the unique course" of the taxpayers' suit "contributed to the cost" and "involved a lot more work than anybody had anticipated in the beginning.

"The only thing that's changed is the numbers because of the long, circuitous path its taken. There was a very clear effort," on the part of the taxpayers, to bring out evidence that would have been more appropriately raised during Ossinger's hearings, an effort that helped to confuse and needlessly delay a final decision concerning the taxpayer's suit, he said.

During Monday night's session, Barshak presented FinCom with an extremely detailed bill for services rendered between June 30, 1981 and August 8, 1984. The document shows that:

•Barshak himself compiled 105.5 hours working on both cases in the last 38 months at an hourly rate of $125, and will receive a total of $13,187.50 in legal fees.

•Partners in Barshak's firm spent 227 hours working on the two cases during the period at an hourly rate of $100, and will receive $22,700 in fees.

•Associates of Barshak's firm compiled 214.9 total hours on both cases at an hourly rate of $75, and will receive $16,117.50 in fees.

•Clerks within Barshak's firm spent 28.8 hours on the job at an hourly rate of $35, and will receive $1,008.

•Paralegals within the firm spent 114.9 hours working on both cases at an hourly rate of $25, and will get $2,872.50.

Beside the $55,885.50 in legal fees going to the abovementioned groups, another $3,906.58 in expenses was added to the bill, including:

•$21.50 for taxicabs.
•$919.52 for photcopies.
•$2,077.50 in transcripts.
•And, $429.75 to take Ossinger's deposition.

civil rights cases, not taxpayers' suit.

He also requested that FinCom get a receipt from Mann for the fees so the city could recoup the money if he is found liable in the Ossinger case and said Ossinger told him she was never approached to settle her claim out of court.

When asked what Newton Highlands attorney Arthur Goldsmith's work during the taxpayers' suit cost, Filippone replied that Goldsmith's legal fees represented only "a small fraction" of those requested by Barshak, but he would not provide a specific amount.

City Solicitor Daniel Funk told FinCom the city will pay Mann's legal fees if the mayor is not found negligent, but added that, if the mayor is found to have maliciously or intentionally violated her rights, the city could sue him to recoup all previously paid fees, including those Ossinger paid to Troy.

Alderman Richard J. McGrath expressed his belief that the large legal bill resulting from the taxpayers' suit could have been avoided if a good faith effort had been made to settle Ossinger's claim out of court after she was acquitted of the 44 counts of larceny brought against her by the city over three years ago.

"There was no pressure to go for a settlement ... (The mayor) doesn't care what it costs because he's not paying it. It's not coming out of his pocket, so he doesn't have that restraint on him," McGrath argued.

Felix Lopex, of 8 Hazelhurst Ave., West Newton, who described himself as a "close friend" of Ossinger, told the aldermen, "I think if the mayor cared, it would have been settled as soon as she was found not guilty ... I don't see any compassion on the mayor's part, especially after he helped to bring about the financial and emotional demise of an individual."

Ballot question reaction differs

(U.S.) domestic economy to create jobs and improve services?"

Barbara Clark, referendum coordinator in Newton, said she considers "a 'yes' vote, a vote for peace and a 'no' vote, one seeking a military solution" to the problems in the area.

In addition to seeking endorsements during the last few weeks, organizers have been distributing leaflets in an effort to inform the public that the question is on the ballot.

"People in Newton are concerned about what is happening in Central America and want to become better informed," the Auburndale resident said, "as has been demonstrated by the good attendance at the lecture series, 'Central America in Perspective,' sponsored by Central Congregational and Eliot churches."

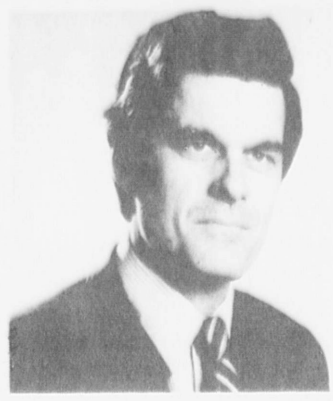

Alderman-at-Large Verne Vance is adamantly opposed to the issue, as well as its presence on the ballot. "No one on the Board of Alderman is qualified to say that we should be in or out of Central America."

The focus of the Ward 7 alderman's opposition is one of national security. "Communism is a creeping paralysis ... I see no reason why, if communism is going to creep into the United States ... that we should let a bigger barrier grow."

Irwin disagreed: "The problems in Central America are long-standing socio-political relationships. They have little to do with communist conspiracy."

Alderman-at-Large Robert Tennant was less decisive about his failure to endorse the question. "I didn't have any specific reason (for not endorsing it) ... I, frankly, felt that I didn't have a sufficient chance to study the details of the thing. I have a general concern about endorsing a ballot question on a pretty complicated and dynamic issue."

But Tennant was quick to stress that his non-committal attitude was not an indication of opposition. "I don't oppose it in any sense. I haven't been asked to, but I wouldn't issue an endorsement on the other side of the issue either," the Ward 3 alderman said.

'Foreign policy in the region has been misguided and counterproductive ... The problem is not the type our military aid can solve.'

Ald. Louis Irwin

Ward 2 Alderman-at-Large Edward Richmond referred to finds the ballot question self explanatory. When read the question, Richmond responded, "Doesn't that say it ... I think Central American policy has been a shambles. It's exactly the kind of situation that led us into a war in Vietnam ...(and) we should not get involved in Vietnam-type escapades."

Noting that "the Board of Alderman has no juristiction here," Richmond said he favors the redirection of funds to the domestic economy and thinks it is important that the representatives be made aware of the people's view.

Irwin agreed by saying, "As a ballot question, it's important (to the voters in Newton) as a statement of the will of the people ... It gives them an opportunity to express their beliefs."

Vance, on the other hand, thinks it is an effort in vain. "It isn't going to mean anything. It strictly gives an opinion. And from a liberal state like Massachusetts, you're going to get a liberal opinion. I don't want to be classed in that category," he said.

Mayor Theodore Mann said he received some information from Clark about the issue, yet was not formerly approached for an endorsement. He said he finds "a divergence of information" about the situation in Central America, and that there is a need for a "moral presence" there.

The referendum has been endorsed by Gov. Michael Dukakis, Reps. Barney Frank, Susan Schur and David Cohen, as well as many other state and local political figures.

The referendum campaign has been conducted by a coalition of Boston-based groups, including Jobs for Peace, Boston Rainbow Coalition, Mobilization for Survival, Central American Solidarity Association, and Catholic Connection.

'No one on the Board of Alderman is qualified to say that we should be in or out of Central America.'

Independents swing toward GOP in primary

The September tilt saw Garden City voters buck a statewide trend and hand primary majorities to former Democratic contender Congressman James M. Shannon and former Republican senatorial candidate Elliot L. Richardson.

Voters here will have to choose between Republican Ray Shamie, a Walpole businessman, and Lt. Gov. John F. Kerry, a former Chestnut Hill resident, during the Nov. 6 election, as the two already well-known tickets vying for the top spot in the White House.

A subtraction of the switch-over votes shows that only about 41 percent of the city's registered Democrats turned out to vote, while about 47 percent of the city's enrolled Republicans went to the polls.

The reason behind the surprisingly low Democratic turnout in the face of a hotly contested, intra-party senate battle remains a mystery, but some political observers here believe President Ronald Reagan's commanding lead in polls taken around primary time may have kept Democrats here unenthusiatic and at home, a situation that may be alleviated by challenger Walter Mondale's strong showing in more recent polls.

About 2,297 unenrolled voters here chose Democratic ballots, while 2,534 pulled the Republican lever one month ago.

Independents carried a majority of the GOP side of the ballot in six of the city's eight wards. Only in Ward 1, where independents-turned-Democrats boasted a 44-vote advantage, and in Ward 6, where they carried a mere eight-vote lead, did independents choose more Democratic ballots than they did Republican.

Independents showed a split preference (less than a 10-vote difference between those voting Republican and those voting Democratic) in Ward 1, Precinct 1; Ward 2, Precinct 2; Ward 2, Precinct 4; Ward 3, Precinct 1; Ward 4, Precinct 1; Ward 5, Precincts 2 and 4; and in Ward 6, Precincts 1 and 4.

The highest independent voter turnout occurred in Ward 5, where 31 percent of the ward's 2,372 eligible unenrolled citizens went to the polls.

NOTICE OF MIDYEAR PROGRAM CHANGES
TO THE CITY OF NEWTON'S PROGRAM YEAR 8 (FY82)
COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT BLOCK GRANT PROGRAM

Federal Community Development Block Grant regulations require that the City make available to the public a description of any additions or cancellations of activities described in Final Statement of Community Development Objectives and Projected Use of Funds. The following is a description of activities cancelled on 12 October 1984, following a public hearing held on 20 September 1984:

1. Cancellation of the Charlesbank Concentrated Block Housing Rehabilitation Fund (FY82 - $30,000)

This project has been proposed to be cancelled because it was originally established to provide concentrated housing rehabilitation improvements to areas of Newton Corner with concentrations of blighted housing, and funding was provided in FY81 ($100,000) and FY82 ($30,000). Although response was good in the earlier application cycles, it fell off substantially to the point that only one applications was funded in the third cycle. This was in spite of several extensive outreach efforts. It has therefore been possible to service all cases with funding from the initial FY81 grant of $100,000.

Newton dance instructor Butler is a 'wiz'

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Leslie Butler arcs a lean, graceful arm above her head and points to the middle of a dance studio, where 12 young teenaged girls are sliding and hop-stepping to the strains of a moody Rick James tune spinning from a record in the corner.

While the young dancers finagle their feet into complex triplets and maneuver their way into the combination movements of innovative jazz choreography, Butler swivels her thin, leotarded frame to the music and demonstrates the form the students should emulate.

"Don't let your body die at the top," she shouts. "If you feel like you're about to step on someone's back, move back, improvise. When this happens on stage, you can't say, 'Sorry, I made a mistake, let me do it over.' You have to dance around her."

Butler should know.

Prior to teaching ballet and jazz classes three nights a week at the Joanne Langione Dance Center of the Newton Community Service Center, Butler had to be on her improvisational toes almost every night as a professional dancer and member of the Tony-award winning Broadway production, "The Wiz."

In addition to playing "Poppie," "Wilkie" and "Tornado" for sold-out audiences during the show's 1974-79, five-year run, Butler has taught and choreographed for a dance company in Kenya, was with the Pearl Primus African Dance Company and the American Ballet Theater and toured Austria and Europe where she appeared on more than 30 TV shows, including "Solid Gold."

And although Butler will go back to a workshop in Germany for Thanksgiving, her last professional performance occurred on a Russian cruise ship in the Mediterranean and North Africa last summer.

Tonight, the almond eyes of the youthful-looking performer who won't reveal her age gleam mischievously as she explains why she shifted her energies from performance to instruction.

"I wanted to make the transition gracefully," she says, laughing. "It's a grueling schedule, a demanding life."

Apparently, her teaching schedule is no less demanding. The energetic dance classes Butler gives every other evening at the center top off her full day as a dance program instructor at a local high school.

Butler's own instruction began at four years old, where the youngster took dance lessons for physical therapy and fell in love with the art as a life pursuit.

A graduate of Watertown High School, Butler attended the Elma Louis School of Fine Arts in Roxbury and then went on to earn a bachelor of fine arts from New York's prestigious Julliard School of Music.

Although instructing does differ from her previous routines, Butler integrates as many performing techniques into the classroom as she can. "Most schools concentrate on techniques," she explains. "The students here are in the process of learning my techniques and vocabulary, but I want them to dance it."

One secret Butler learned through her professional experience and wishes to pass on to students is "how to get through something when you really don't to do it." She admits most professionals cringe at the thought of teaching beginners, but insists, stamping her foot on the floor, that she enjoys it. "The students seem eager to learn," Butler says. "They are dedicated. Many times they stay after class to practice on their own."

Right now, though, the budding professionals are still trying to keep up with the endless energy of their teacher.

"Arms open, now down ... and reeech, reeech ...," Butler says, pulling her thin frame upward. Her eyes scale the wall-length mirrors in front of her in order to observe student hands fluttering to their sides and torsos which must forever attempt to remain tightened and erect.

When the clock strikes nine and the last Rick James' album spins to an end, students pile onto the mat in the corner to unleash their hair barretts and tug boots over bulky legwarmers.

Acknowledging her students, but not letting the chattery bustle bother her, Butler continues to scuff her bare, brown feet against the rough surface of the old linoleum floor, clicking her fingers and waving to the rhythms of a musical choreography she is mapping out in her head. She looks up from her musical musing and smiles. "I do feel tired at five, but the minute I step into this class, I get my energy back all over again," she says.

Merger of Civil Service lists confuses officials, firemen

By Richard Nangle
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A seemingly premature Civil Service listing for the city's fire personnel has applicants for lieutenant wondering who will get the promotions.

Firemen Jay Leone and Glen Davis told the aldermanic Public Safety and Transportation Committee Monday night that they were bumped from the top two positions on the old Civil Service list when a new merged list came out Sept. 28.

Leone and Davis contended that Civil Service regulations stated the list they had been on was valid until December, which would have been two years after they were placed on the list.

The merged list, compiled with results from the most recent exam (May), has Davis and Leone at the 9th and 13th positions respectively for promotions to lieutenant.

Chairman Elaine Gentile said it is possible Civil Service has adopted new regulations that have not been announced yet to city departments.

She said the committee will ask Chief Edward Reilly, representatives from the Law and Personnel Depts. and a Civil Service representative to attend the committee's next meeting and iron out the confusion surrounding the issue.

Gentile said she was told Reilly was advised not to attend Monday night's committee meeting. She said she is unsure where that directive may have come from, but that the Mayor's office might be responsible.

Leone told the committee that Reilly and Mayor Theodore Mann were holding off making promotions to lieutenant until an up-to-date listing of Civil Service marks were available for promotions to captain.

But when that list arrived, so too did the merged list for lieutenant combining results of the most recent and previous test scores of city firemen.

Alderman Richard McGrath told the committee that in past circumstances appointments were made before positions were open in order to avoid having firemen lose their status with the arrival of new exam lists.

> 'The real concern we must have here is the morale of the department... Civil Service is fooling around with other people's lives.'
> Ald. Richard Bullwinkle

Gentile said a Civil Service spokesman she recently spoke with told her the new list would provide more qualified applicants.

But a fireman who declined to be identified said the tests themselves vary from exam to exam making grade comparisons impossible.

"The real concern we must have here is the morale of the department," Alderman Richard Bullwinkle said.

"If guys are going to take exams they've got to know the lists are going to stand for a period of time. This isn't any way to run a railroad. We've got to know what the facts are. Civil Service is fooling around with other people's lives," Bullwinkle said.

"I think if I were in (Leone's and Davis') place I'd be in a court. I don't know if it's legal or not but it just isn't right," he said.

Leone said he presented Reilly in August with rumors that a new list would come out before December, but was told that had never happened before and wasn't expected to happen.

Bullwinkle said Civil Service has indicated that a second test score merger could be made after the next exam is given - a possibility he said might cause people to believe that appointments were being dictated on a political basis.

Fireman William Adams told the committee that the new list, which went into effect Sunday, has him second in line for lieutenant and it would be unfair to reverse the decision and take that away from him.

"I don't have anything against these guys," Adams said while gesturing toward Davis and Leone, "Up until yesterday I wasn't going to say anything, but as of yesterday the list is effective."

Mondale good, but Reagan did better

It wasn't so much that Walter Mondale was less impressive than in the first go-round, but the fact that Ronald Reagan did so much better. This time, the president came well prepared and was totally in command. He undoubtedly solidified his position as a strong favorite to win on Nov. 6.

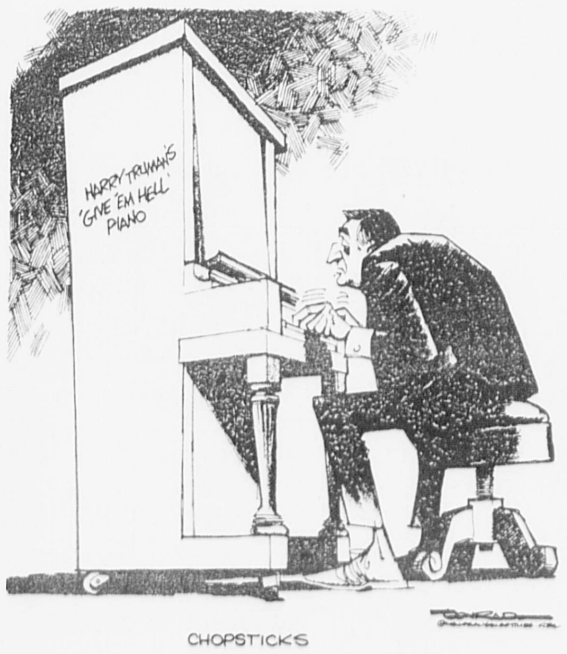

In retrospect, Mr. Reagan must have underestimated Mondale capability in advance of the initial confrontation. Perhaps confident he could handle anything tossed his way, two weeks ago, the man in the White House clearly hadn't done his homework. Pauses and some bumbling made it a bad night for him.

Here was an informed and more poised Reagan. Issues of foreign policy, the debate theme, are historically the strongest sphere of influence of an administration even when so complex when at present. A president is more aware of anyone of the nuts and bolts of what lies behind crisis and policy details, thus providing him with an advantage.

Where Mondale fired off his criticisms in direct, simplistic terms, Reagan could go deeper into the specifics as to what went into important decisions. What came out of this was a lesson in world geopolitics. Reagan emerged as a leader who had complete knowledge of what was happening to counter the Mondale attack. Both in the Middle East and Central America, his responses were pertinent.

The related subjects of arms control and nuclear power expansion which took up so much of the debate were correctly labeled "irrelevant" by anylysts George Wills. For all the fuss made by anti-nuclear forces, the freeze possibility has to be a wishful goal unless the Soviets come into the picture with sincerity. That prospect is so dim any meaningful arms control remains a long way down the road.

In any case, the 1984 election is not going to be decided by the nuclear question. It will turn on whether the nation believes the Mondale charge that stronger leadership is needed or whether what Ronald Reagan has accomplished in four years rates him another term. Reagan was vigorous and knowledgeable enough Sunday night to dispel any doubts.

The ultra-liberal media strikes

Beware of misrepresentation

By William A. Rusher

As the presidential campaign thunders toward its climax, thoughtful people will be on guard, even more than ordinarily, against misrepresentations in our ultra-liberal national media. The famous Lichter-Rothman survey in 1980 revealed that at least 80 percent of the media elite voted Democratic in every presidential election since 1964. They haven't changed their spots.

A truly spectacular example of distortion appeared recently in the anti-Reagan New York Times. In his first debate with Walter Mondale, President Reagan asked the American people whether they believed the country was better off economically today than it was four years ago. Anticipating that question, the Times assigned reporter Peter T. Kilborn to write a long article on the subject. Accompanying his article when it appeared on Oct. 9 was a chart, entitled: "The Carter and Reagan Terms: How the Economy Fared." If a Museum of Journalistic Dishonesty is ever created, that chart deserves a glass case all to itself.

The chart purportedly sets forth comparative figures for the Carter and Reagan administrations, in seven categories of economic measurement. The first is "economic growth," as reflected by the "increases in the GNP, adjusted for inflation." The increases given are: Carter 13.6 percent, Reagan 10.3 percent. It should be borne in mind, however, that Carter and Reagan did not start from the same base:

The growth experienced by the economy in the Reagan administration was on top of the entire growth it achieved under Carter.

The next category involves interest rates, but here the Times becomes preternaturally choosy. It concentrates solely on "home mortgage rates (25-year fixed rate)" — a notoriously sluggish indicator — and offers us two measurements: an "administration average" (Carter 10.60 percent, Reagan 13.86 percent) and an "administration peak" (Carter 14.15 percent, Reagan 16.38 percent). What the Times thereby conceals is the astronomical prime rate when Carter left office (20.16 percent) and how far Reagan has brought it down (it is 12.75 percent today).

Then come the measurements for "inflation," defined as the "rise in the Consumer Price Index during the administration." Here the Times simply throws in the sponge: Carter 45.7 percent, Reagan 26.1 percent. Even this, however, avoids comparing the rate of inflation for Carter's last 12 months (11.7 percent) and Reagan's most recent 12 (4.2 percent) — that, of course, being the comparison invited by Mr. Reagan's question.

Next comes the "unemployment rate," which was 7.5 percent when Carter left office and is 7.4 percent today, even though five-and-a-half million more people have joined the work force. None of this, however, is even hinted at in the Times chart. Instead we are offered the "average administration rates" (Carter 6.4 percent, Reagan 8.6 percent — reflecting the big rise in unemployment during the midterm recession) and the raw numbers of unemployed at the end of Carter's term and today (7.6 million and 8.5 million, respectively) without reference to the size of the work force.

When it comes to the "national debt," however, the Times skips the fancy footwork and uses the proper comparison (since it is unfavorable to Reagan): Carter $914.3 billion in fiscal 1980, Reagan $1,575.6 billion in fiscal 1984.

In the matter of "poverty," the Times resorts to the old Mondale dodge of counting only cash benefits in computing a family's poverty (i.e., disregarding non-cash benefits, which can rise to as high as 70 percent of total income). On that basis it finds 13 percent below the poverty line at the end of the Carter administration, and 15.2 percent today.

Finally, under "disposable personal income in 1972 dollars," the Times concedes there was an increase of only 7.9 percent under Carter, vs. 9.8 percent under Reagan.

And there you have it: Of nine measurements, seven seem favorable to Carter — even though this usually requires ignoring Reagan's request that we compare his end result with Carter's.

America was better off under Carter — says the Times!

(William Rusher writes for the Newspaper Enterprise Association.)

Are you better off today?

By Robert J. Wagman

At almost every campaign stop, Ronald Reagan asks the crowd, "Are you better off today than you were four years ago?"

Polls show that most voters believe they are.

It might be that you are better off if you think you are. But some polls have found that people tend to confuse time — to lump years together.

Most people are better off today than they were during the trough of the 1981-82 recession. According to pollsters, when people are asked if they are better off now than they were four years ago, they often think of the conditions of two years ago.

But there are objective measurements that can help answer the president's rhetorical question.

Ed Rollins, Reagan's campaign manager, says, "We have reduced inflation, we have reduced taxes and there are more Americans working today than in the history of this country."

To this list of achievements, Rollins says, one can add the general economic growth of the last four years, the fact that the average American today has a record amount of disposable income and the strength of the dollar as opposed to foreign currencies.

Using Rollins' criteria, there can be no debate that inflation is way down. In the last year of the Carter administration it was in double figures; now annual inflation is in the 4 to 5 percent range.

The so-called "Misery Index," which combines inflation and unemployment, was at a record 22 when Jimmy Carter left office. Now it is below 12.

Inflation fell, of course, because of the recession. In both 1981 and 1982 real income dropped in this country. Only in 1983 did it rise again, and then by a very modest 1.6 percent. Some economists believe now that with two years of economic growth, inflation will again push upward next year. But no one is forecasting a rate much in excess of 6 percent.

As for Republicans' boasts that they cut taxes, the evidence is contradictory. In 1981, the president pushed the largest single tax cut in history through Congress. But then in 1982 he signed into law a package of tax changes that boosted taxes by $98 billion over three years. Later that year he approved the first hike in the federal gasoline tax since 1959 — a boost of five cents a gallon. Finally, last year, he approved another $51 billion in tax increases over three fiscal years.

> Disposable household income is up ... because in an increasing number of households, more than one member is working.

In 1985, the combined effects of the 1982 and 1983 tax bills and an increase in the gasoline tax will cost taxpayers $3.4 billion more than they will save through the effects of the 1981 tax cuts.

At the same time, administration cuts in social programs and in direct aid to state and local governments have spurred those governments to raise taxes. The Tax Foundation now estimates that the average U.S. household pays a greater percentage of its income for taxes than it did four years ago.

The evidence on unemployment also is a bit contradictory. The administration rightly says that more Americans are working today than at any time in history, but the actual unemployment rate, which stands at 7.4 percent, is exactly what it was when Jimmy Carter returned to Plains.

During Carter's four years in office the number of Americans holding jobs increased by 12.5 percent. Since then the number has increased only 8.6 percent. There are some 8.6 million Americans who cannot find a job, about 1.5 million more than when Reagan was sworn in.

Many of these are long-term unemployed who lost their jobs during the recession. For 6.1 million of them, all unemployment benefits have expired, many because of changes in the rules made by this administration.

The White House is correct when it brags that disposable income — the amount people have left over after paying taxes — has never been higher, increasing by 9 percent over the last four years. But during the same period, real wages per employed person have increased by a mere 2 percent and the median weekly income of one-worker families has dropped by about 9 percent.

In other words, disposable household income is up, not because individual workers are earning more, but because in an increasing number of households, more than one member is working.

The dollar is strong — at an all-time high against most foreign currencies. This strength helps Americans buying foreign goods and Americans traveling abroad. But a strong dollar is a double-edged sword, which makes it harder to sell U.S. goods abroad. This has caused the trade deficit to rise from $25 billion in 1980 to an estimated $125 billion this year.

Finally, it is assumed by one and all that the economy has grown by leaps and bounds during Reagan's first term. But surprise — economic growth, as measured by growth in the gross national product, under Reagan is almost exactly the same as it was under Carter.

During the Carter administration, the economy grew at the rate of 2.95 percent a year. For Ronald Reagan's first four years it is estimated to have grown an average of 3.14 percent. This is not a significant difference. In fact, if the recovery tails off sharply in the fourth quarter of this year as many economists are predicting, economic growth under Reagan will end up almost exactly what it was under Carter.

But the difference in growth under Carter and under Reagan is one of timing. Growth during the four Carter years was slow but steady. In the Reagan term it has come in a rush over the last 18 months.

(Robert Wagman writes for the Newspaper Enterprise Association.)

Fire Chief Rielly lauded for months-old fireworks flap

A twenty-one gun salute to the City of Newton's Fire Chief Edward Rielly whose proof of fair dealing and high moral and ethical standards is unimpeachable.

May I suggest to the rabble rousers in Nonantum that the fire chief has done his job, his mind is made up, the decision will not change a bit, and if you want another fireworks permit in the next forty years, then you'd better stop complaining and start apoligizing.

Thanks from RSVP, Post 440

Lest we be like the lepers who forgot to say thanks after Jesus healed them, my friend and I would like to shout a giant-sized "thank you" to all concerned for the champion luncheon held to honor the Retired Senior Volunteers at Post 440 on California Street.

The food was so delicious and the servings so generous, and the waiters and waitresses volunteered their services so cheefully. Thank you.

It was so thrilling to behold so many volunteers in one room and to actually see the ones who have given five and ten years and more and 8,000 volunteer hours and more.

It's exciting to see what a big team we are part of. So many working, useful hands!

Pro choice is not pro abortion, LWVM says

By Ann Morse Hartner

Being pro choice in matters of birth control and abortion does not mean you are pro abortion any more than it means you are anti-life or anti-family! Pro choice means you support the right of people to make reproductive decisions for themselves, based on their own beliefs.

The chairman of the Massachusetts Citizens for life (MCFL) stated (in The News Tribune, 9/25/84; The Graphic 9/26/84; The Dedham Transcript,; etc.) that "(t)here is absolutely no one in the world who says they are pro-choice and who is not pro-abortion ... It's simply a cop out for someone to say they are pro-choice ..." She has obviously not talked to members of pro-choice organizations such as the League of Wome Voters of Massachusetts (LWVM).

The LWVM position on goverrnmental involvement in the issues of birth control and abortion is a result of a league study conducted in 1971-72, prior to the Supreme Court decision (Roe vs. Wade, 1973) legalizing abortion. The position is based on a careful examination of the origin, interpretation and application of laws, not on the "rightness or wrongness" of birth control and abortion. Members across the state perceived that, like themselves, people were of many different religious denominations and held diverse views on the morality of birth control and abortion; they decided that restructive laws could not allow people to exercise very different moral values. Members found that restrictive laws were inequitable; the laws favored the affluent, the well educated, the married, and those living in or near urban areas, whil they discriminated against the poor, the uneducated, the unmarried and young, and the rural residents.

Therefore, although members agreed that preventive measures (sex education, birth control) to avoid unwanted pregnancies are preferable to abortion, they felt abortion had to be a matter decided on privately by a woman and her physician, not an issue to be legislated. Further, to ensure that the poor could have access to what the more affluent could afford, members agreed that birth control and abortion information and services should be available to all who want them, regardless of age or marital condition, where necessary at public expense.

So the LWVM, in lobbying against anti-abortion legislation, has long been telling public officials, "You can't be opposed to abortion AND oppose anti-abortion legislation or constitutional amendments." We understand that those opposed to abortion are motivated by the belief that a person begins at the moment of conception. We respect this belief. (The issue is not when life begins; an egg and a sperm are alive; we pass life along. The issue is when a "person" begins.) But the religious and philosophical issue of when a conceptus becomes a person has no agreement among religious denominations. By proposing legislation or constitutional amendments prohibiting abortion or public funding of abortion, the opponents of abortion are simply trying to impose, on us all, one belief about abortion — their belief. This is contrary to the guarantees of privacy and freedom of religion, rights protected by both our federal and state constitutions.

In the September article, it was said that the MCFL chairman "believes she holds the same views on abortion as most people in the country." She is mistaken. National polls, whether by news networks or Better Homes and Gardens, continue to show that 70 to 80 percent of the public is pro choice. Massachusetts residents are the same. A June, 1983 poll, conducted for the Campaign for Choice, of which the LWVM is a member, found that 79 percent of Massachusetts voters supported the view that abortion is a "personal, private choice that state government should stay out of." Only 10 percent believed that state government should decide "when and whether to allow or prohibit abortion." Support for freedom of choice was strong among all categories of voters regardless of sex, age, income level, political or religious affiliation.

Unlike the MCFL, the LWV niether supports nor opposes candidates for office. The league does seek to educate voters about important issues. Through our candidates forums and voters' guides we try to help voters learn candidates positions. If freedom of choice in reproductive matters is important to you, you should know that in its next session state legislators will decide whether the state constitution should be amended to allow themselves to regulate or prohibit abortion, or the public and private funding of abortion or the provision of facilities and services of abortion. (I regret that Archbishop Bernard Law broke with tradition and came to the State House himself to support this amendment. I had hoped that the ecumenical spirit he showed at his inestiture when he said about abortion that: "... our purpose is not to condemn, but rather to persuade, to call to conversion," would continue. I had hoped he could follow the path of Cardinal Richard Cushing who said in 1965 about state birth control laws: "Catholics do not need support of civil law to be faithful to their own religious convictions, and they do not seek to impose by law their moral views on members of society."

At the national level you should know before you vote, whether candidates for senate or house will vote against choice to deny, to the poor, access to legal medical procedure by denying Medicaid funding for abortion; or whether they support the funding of family planning programs which provide confidential services to teens so that they can avoid unwanted pregnancies.

Just as important as your vote is your active participation after the election. Let your legislators and members of Congress know how you feel. They need to hear from the pro-choice majority not only from a vocal minority like the MCFL. Ironically, we have to do somethiing a little "public" in order to keep a private matter private. (Letters to public officials really are private, though.) You can help your elected officials, who may be personally opposed to abortion, gain the understanding and courage to say, as does Congresswoman Geraldine Ferraro, "This country is based on a separation of church and state. As a Catholic I accept the premise that a fertilized ovum is a baby. I have been blessed with the gift of faith; but others have not. I have no right to impose my beliefs on them."

Don't be fooled. When the League of Women Voters, the Religious Coalition for Abortion Rights, Catholics for Free Choice, Planned Parenthood, the Business and Professional Women, the Gray Panthers, the National Organization for Women, etc., or public officials, or your nieghbors say they are pro choice, that is exactly what they mean.

(Ann Morse Hartner, a Newtonville resident, is women's issues director for the League of Women Voters of Massachusetts.)

Commercial development is a 'shortsighted' solution

The administration of the City of Newton's argument that commercial development is the solution for stabilizing property taxes is shortsighted. Expansion of the tax base through commercial development has several flaws. Increased commercial development will create higher demands on city services, e.g. sewer, water, fire, police, and road maintenance. Traffic flow will increase to meet the demands of employees. The city's assessment from the MBTA will increase to reflect the gain in ridership caused by new development.

As costs to the city rise, there will be a need to raise more revenue. This can be accomplished by several methods: increased commercial development, sales or city wage taxes, parking taxes, or increased property taxes. At some future point the city will reach its saturation point of development; therefore, the solution to stabilized property taxes is delaying the inevitability of increased property taxes.

Who benefits from this solution in the long run? Is it those individuals who trade in real estate either as investors or brokers?

As the City of Newton changes from the city of gardens into the city of brick and concrete, those residents who lose their desired quality of life will be short-changed, or some will be forced to leave. The profit of this process will accrue to the realtor, since the realtor will realize a greater short-term profit by this destabilizing change.

I ask the readership, if a person who stands to profit through the indirect effect of commercial development, can that person expect the public to perceive that they are independent when voting on the critical issue of development? I publicly ask each member of the Board of Aldermen to examine their conscience prior to voting on commercial development issues from which they may indirectly gain.

As for spending the taxpayer's hard-earned money on a village stabilization study, why not employ the resources within the city government to reach out to the people, both business and residential in each village and come to an equitable solution? Who knows better our desires than we, the people who live here? Will we be given no choice at great expense to ourselves?

The quality of life that brought us to Newton, or, as in my case, kept me in Newton, is being deteriorated by this ongoing misconception that we must continually develop to survive.

Lack of teachers' contract is creating tension, unrest

An open letter to Mayor Theodore Mann:

Dear Mayor Mann,

The Newton Public Schools, reknowned for excellence in program and personnel, face a potential crisis. The continuing lack of a teachers' contract and the resulting disquiet among staff, has created an atmosphere of tension and unrest.

We value our teachers. Their talents, professionalism and dedication is highly regarded by students, parents and other educators. The new contract should reflect a salary scale, benefits and working conditions commensurate with their outstanding qualifications.

The Brown Junior High School Parent Teacher Association strongly urges all members of the negotiating team to resolve any differences and facilitate a swift settlement. When morale is low, students, as well as teachers, suffer. Education in Newton will be best served by an early ratificaton of the contract. The students, teachers and parents deserve nothing less.

Sincerely yours,
Ellen MacLean
President,
Brown P.T.A.

Flood insurance question

Alternate solution sought

By Richard Nangle, Staff Writer

NEWTON — An alternative solution to a proposed amendment to the city's controversial flood plain ordinance may be in the works.

The aldermanic Land Use Committee this week asked Assistant City Solicitor Michael Pierce to try and come up with an ordinance that would ease residents' concerns about property values and still have enough clout to maintain national flood insurance provided by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA).

Pierce's task is to write a non-zoning ordinance that would cover the nearly 300 homes which would be considered in the flood plain under the amendment. Currently 229 homes are covered under an ordinance passed by the Board of Aldermen in 1971.

The current ordinance restricts development of existing structures unless flood compensation measures are feasible. Any new plan must allow for similarly strict controls or FEMA will rescind flood insurance.

Local attorney Peter Harrington, who is assisting but not actually representing residents' concerns, said a 1981 study expanded the flood plain to 517 homes as far as FEMA is concerned. Now the town must take some kind of action to cover those additional homes, he said.

The federally designated flood plain takes into account the area that would be affected by a flood of "100 year" proportions surrounding Cheesecake, Paul and Southmeadow brooks.

Harrington suggested the 1971 ordinance could stand and a non-zoning ordinance be written for the remaining homes, thereby not endangering those residents' property values.

But Conservation Commissioner Frank Wright said such a proposal would violate provisions for equal protection under zoning laws.

"I would just as soon the city go one way or another and not fool around with different classifications," he said.

Harrington said flood waters would rise in a major storm partially because storm drains and pipes in the area are not large enough to handle overflow that might be generated.

Some committeemen suggested that under a non-zoning ordinance the Conservation Commission or Building Inspector be called upon to grant site plan approval to residents in the flood plain who want to put additions on their homes.

But Alderman Cynthia Creem said the Board of Aldermen should not give up any of its powers to a board (Conservation Commission) appointed by the Executive Department.

Wright said under FEMA regulations site plan applicants are already required to come before the Conservation Commission. He said the city's decision is whether to have those applicants come before the Board of Aldermen for a special permit on land use matters.

Atty. Mark White, who is representing neighborhood concerns, said a non-zoning ordinance would be easier on the city, accomplish the same things as the proposed amendment, allow for retention of flood insurance and place no restrictions on affected resident's property, and not diminish property values like the amendment would.

White said the city is inviting neighborhood quarrels by mandating special permits for development in the flood plain. The Board of Aldermen, he said, could refuse to grant a swimming pool if neighbors showed up and complained there would be too much noise generated or a myriad of other problems.

But the Conservation Commission on the other hand, he said, makes its decisions based only on environmental impact.

Alderman Rodney Barker, arguing for aldermanic control of site plan approval for flood plains, countered that neighborly concerns are indeed germane to whether a permit for a swimming pool should be granted.

The FEMA imposed deadline for a solution to the flood plain ordinance is January 8, or the city is in danger of losing its flood insurance. In addition, residents under the FEMA flood plain would not be able to take a mortgage out on their houses without the coverage.

Pierce will bring his plan before the board on November 26, in time for the proposal to be voted on by committee and brought before the Board of Aldermen in December.

Affirmative action director chosen soon

NEWTON — The Garden City will have a new director of Affirmative Action in about three weeks, according to Personnel Department Director Richard Moynihan.

Moynihan said a committee has narrowed a list of about 40 applicants to five finalists for the $20,000 to $27,000 a year job.

The new director will be in charge of putting together an affirmative action plan in conjunction with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination (MCAD) to take the city through 1989, Moynihan said.

Moynihan declined to name the candidates but said four are minorities and one of the minority finalists is a woman.

The committee chose finalists based on experience with such groups as Housing and Urban Development, the Department of Social Services and various personnel or legal experience, Moynihan said.

No library at Hyde site, group says

By Frank DeBenedetto
Correspondent

NEWTON -- The Hyde Reuse Joint Advisory Planning Group last week voted to reject the building of a new public library as a potential use for the site of the now-vacant Hyde school.

The 13 to 1 vote to pass the motion came after committee members cited traffic concerns, potential destructuction of the existing buildings, an overly municipal use on the site and too much time for the site to be vacant, as their main reasons for making the decisions.

As one group member put it, a new library on the site would "dramatically change the face of the Highlands."

Robert Swett, chairman of the Physical Feasability and Construction Subcommittee, informed the Hyde Group of that committee's decision, in conjunction with the Library Needs Committee, to narrow the appropriate sites for a new library down to the Homer-Walnut site, a vacant lot, and the Hyde site.

According to Swett, finances for construction of a new main library on the Hyde site may have to come from profit made on the sale of existing city property such as the Warren Junior High School building, the Newton Corner main library and the Oak Hill School site.

Alderman Rodney Barker, present at the meeting, said that financing a new library would mean a process that would take some time, he termed it as a "nebulous proposal."

The Hyde School

File photo

Deliberations continued on what uses the Hyde Group may suggest for the site, including housing, commercial, community and school uses. The group is now in the process of examining combinations of uses that encompass some or all of these scenarios.

The Hyde group, which was appointed by Mayor Mann to examine possible reuses for the Hyde School, has a Nov. 11 deadline to reach a decision on which use it deems best for the community and the city as a whole. The group will then present their proposal to the Real Property Reuse Committee of the Board of Alderman. Last week's meeting was the group's seventh.

Newton developer Alan Green was on hand to present a potential housing complex on the site which would blend in architecturally with the buildings along Lincoln Street, thus preserving the streetscape of the area. His proposal was taken into consideration by the group.

Officials from the Wellesley Montessori School were present to notify the group of their flexibility concerning use of the newer Hyde building as it stands. The officials said that they would be willing to lease the first floor of the building, or purchase it, if either was financially feasable for the school. Their remarks were also taken into consideration.

Poll shows Frank way ahead of Forte

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON -- An independently conducted poll of Fourth Congressional District voters shows Democratic Rep. Barney Frank carrying a commanding lead over Republican challenger and Newtonville resident Jim Forte, according to Frank's district director.

The poll also shows a "horse race" for both the US Senate seat being vacated by Sen. Paul Tsongas and between the two tickets involved in the presidential race.

Dorothy Reichard, district director for Frank, said recently that the poll conducted by Martilla & Kiley, Inc., a State Street political consulting firm, gave the local incumbent 78 percent of the vote in the district, which stretches from the Garden City to Fall River.

Reichard added that the senatorial contest between Democratic Lt. Gov. John F. Kerry, a former Chestnut Hill resident, and Republican Ray Shamie, a Walpole businessman, as well as the race between the Mondale-Ferraro and Reagan-Bush presidential slates are "pretty near neck and neck" according to poll.

"It's really a horse race," she said.

Reichard refused to divulge the exact results concerning the latter contests, saying that Frank's campaign managers are waiting to see if either Kerry's and Mondale's directors would like to release the poll showings themselves.

The Boston-based consulting firm made 400 random phone call to voters within the Fourth District during the period one week before and one week after the October 7 presidential debate between President Ronald Reagan and Democratic challenger Walter Mondale, Reichard said.

About 78 percent of those polled said Frank was "doing a good job" with constutient services, was responsive to constituent needs, is speaking out on national issues and is helping to solve local problems, she said.

"The poll also clearly showed that Jim Forte is just not well known in the district," Reichard added. Forte is a 25-year-old political novice.

The poll will likely cost the Frank campaign anywhere from $5,000 to $6,000, she said.

Damage estimates at North High take a drop

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

NEWTON -- Water damage caused by an artroom sink that vandals plugged and left running at the Newton North High School is about $15,000 less than originally estimated and was repaired in time for students to return to their classrooms without delay.

Assistant Superintendent for Operations and Planning Vincent Silluzio said the industrial arts machines originally thought to have been damaged by water which ran through three corridors and more than 15 offices and storage rooms were unharmed, and that most of the costs, now re-estimated at $5,000-$10,000, would pay for ceiling tiles, rented carpet shampooers and overtime for custodians.

According to Silluzio, school custodians and city workers including plumbers and electricians arrived at the scene less than hour after police discovered water cascading from a window on the school's fourth floor Sunday morning.

"They removed the water with pumps and vacuum cleaners and we borrowed blowers from the fire department to help dry stuff out," Silluzio said. While students Monday morning attended a previously scheduled lecture in the auditorium, workers were able to finish replacing ceiling tiles, shampooed the carpets and extracted all remaining water from them.

Although he has "no idea" who committed the crime, Silluzio said there was no indication of forced entry but that police are still investigating the incident.

The assistant superintendent added that security officers were scheduled to be in the building this past weekend as a short-term measure to prevent similar incidents from occurring. School officials are also looking into steps for "future, more long-term action," he said.

Silluzio added that although vandalism is not widespread in the schools, it "is a shame" whenever it occurs, because "the first instinct of people is to blame all of the students. It's only a small number of people that do it," he said.

"A lot of people worked very hard to get the building back in shape," Silluzio concluded. "I think we have the cleanest carpets in the east now."

Riding tall in special saddle

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

Dorothy Long lifts her hand, clicks her teeth and gently jabs the point of her boot into 'Shamus's' soft, heaving side. As the mild-mannered mare lurches lazily through the plush-turfed arena of the Weston Riding School, the novice equestrian grins and lifts herself taller in the saddle.

The air is edged with the slight chill of early fall sunsets. Old leaves crackle beneath the hooves of 'Freckles,' 'Caper,' 'Celia' and 'Peacepipe,' as red-nosed volunteers lead the horses from the barn into the ring.

Once helmets are secured and saddles, bridles and bits are in place, the volunteers will help Dorothy and her friends Natalie, Cindy, Danny and Theresa to maneuver the tame animals around paths and cones in the fenced-in arena.

"Everyone is equal when they're on a horse," says volunteer Alicia Wyman. "They all start at the same level."

But although Dorothy and her friends are riding on top of the world today, they don't normally have the same chance as other kids their age to 'be equal.'

The five young equestrians are special needs students whose difficulties range from mild to severe mental limitations and/or physical handicaps.

And while they all have a variety of interests and abilities, their talents often stay undeveloped and misunderstood by members of the community, according to the program's director, Rick Cass.

Cass is special needs director for the Newton Recreation Department. Alicia, Pam Hakim, Kerry Bahrenburg and Jamie Morris are just four of many more volunteers he hopes to recruit for the department's new "Volunteers in Special Needs Program."

"Often in the case of special needs, there tends to be an attitude of isolation," Cass says. "Society as a whole is unaware of people like this and there tends to be a lot of unintentional segregation. People don't see under the surface of the disabled person, where there are so many other issues."

According to Cass, the benefits special needs volunteers lend to society are multifold. In addition to aiding those who need the extra time and companionship, their service also helps to chip away at the barriers of misunderstanding and misconceptions that can exist among "normal" people in the community.

Volunteers here support that theory. "This gives me an opportunity to work around people I'm not normally comfortable with," says volunteer Jamie Morris. "I tend to be a little afraid of the handicapped."

Wyman says just two or three sessions in the ring with mentally retarded student, Cindy and white pony, 'Cecil' has made her "more comfortable" with the handicapped, people she used to "look away from."

In addition to horseback riding, Cass and his staff and volunteers offer skating, swimming, dancing, cooking, traveling clubs and a drop-in center for special needs people.

But programs alone cannot fill the void, Cass says. Just like any other human being, the special needs person desires and requires a variety of relationships.

The more volunteers a special needs person meets, the greater his or her connection with the community. "They remember when people visit," Cass says. "People are very important to them."

It is also important to convince the community that almost everyone has something to contribute as a volunteer.

"When I tell people what I do, many of them respond, 'Oh, how nice. I admire you, because I could never do that," Cass says. "Of course they can do it. All they need is someone to help them get into it."

Cass would like nothing better than to help.

The special needs director has brought his message through the doors of local colleges and universities, private businesses and community organizations, in the hopes that those listening will open up some doors of their own and volunteer.

"We want to match people up with their own interests," Cass says. "We want them to tell us what they like, whether it's basketball, hockey, swimming, horseback riding, sewing.."

Randy Cohen works at the Weston Riding School which lends horses for the classes during October. She says a program like this is not only "great for both the kids and horses" but also tends to "help you put everything in perspective and to be able to deal with all people," not just those with special needs.

How do the five riders feel? Cindy hasn't stopped laughing since she got on her horse. Fueled with a rare sense of independence, most of the other students are creating new stunts, going for the third or fourth turn around the ring and sharing what they've learned from today's lesson with their new friends.

"Look, her ears are back," Dorothy warns the reporter walking too close behind "Shamus'" rear. "He may kick." Coaxing the mare to calm down, she turns the horse with ease and continues her ride.

"O.K., bucko, it's back on the trail again," she says with a grin.

Local group wins grant

NEWTON -- The Freeport Corporation has announced the recipients of its first annual awards program. A total of $7,700 was awarded to four local organizations for programs to serve youth in Newton, Needham, Wellesley and Weston.

The Freeport Corporation was founded in 1969 by a class at Newton North High School for the purpose of creating an alternative living situation for troubled adolescents. The sale of the original Freeport House in 1983 has provided the capital for the Freeport Annual Awards Program.

For 1984 the directors have awarded $500 to the Newton Arts Center to provide arts scholarships for adolescents not living with their families; $3,450 to Newton Community Service Centers for Project S.A.I.L. which will leverage matching funds from the department of Social Services to provide alternative housing for adolescents; $3,250 to the Newton-Wellesley-Weston Multi Service Center for a feasibility study to explore the concept of a Day Activities and Treatment Program for out-of-school teenagers; and $500.00 to The Samaritans to investigate the problem of teenage alcoholism and suicide and to publish and distribute the results of this study to schools in Newton, Needham, Wellesley and Weston.

Freeport's primary interest is in promoting alternative housing and related support services for young people. The Director's are committed to achieving the highest possible impact with the funds available and are hopeful that other donors who are familiar with Freeport award recipients will feel encouraged on their own to support these programs.

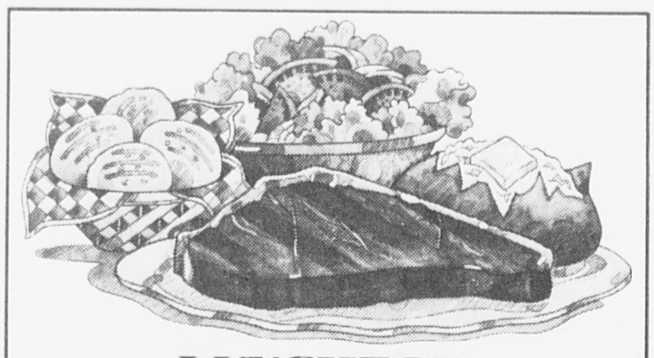

The Freeport Directors are currently accepting applicants for the 1985 Freeport Annual Awards Program. Proposals must be received by January 15 in the office of Grants Management Associates, 100 Franklin Street, Boston. Call 357-1500 for information.

The directors of the Freeport Corporation are Rodney Barker, Mary Douglas, Richard Douglas, Estelle Hochberg, H. Peter Karoff, Marion Kaufman, Jean Kole, Nancy Meyerson, and Susan Rothenberg.

NTA president warns against consequences

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Newton Teachers Association President Tony Croce will recommend that educators in the Garden City accept a recently negotiated teacher contract, not only because he considers the document to be "reasonably fair," but also because he fears the consequences of a contract rejection.

In a statement released to the faculty of the Newton North High School Friday, Croce explained, "While the economic aspects of the School Committee's offer are less than what I feel teachers fairly deserve, I have come to the conclusion that it would be in the best interests of the teachers to approve or ratify this offer."

Along with an outline of the contract's major issues, Croce's statement explains the consequences he fears a rejection would bring. He hopes to present a condensed version to all faculty in the near future.

Rejecting the contract would most likely present a lengthy and difficult legal process from which there would be "no great likelihood of change," Croce explained in an interview in the NTA office Friday. It could also mean diminished relations with the School Committee and a dissolution of the community support which teachers attained through their efforts "to hang in there" and resist any recourse to job actions such as "work to rule" (where teachers perform only duties outlined in the contract and forego extacurricular activities).

"One of the things we need is support from the community," said Croce, adding, "and if they reject this contract, they may never see five and six percent raises again."

One of the most important issues of the contract is salary. The document addresses the question of teacher pay with an offer of a five-percent raise which would increase to six percent in the second year.

Although Croce said he would have pushed for higher figures if he had "the slightest notion there were more money in the city," he said, "Given the city's financial constraints and the constraints imposed on the School Committee, these numbers are really quite reasonable."

"Under the present conditions, it is a good contract for both sides," agreed School Committee chairman, Leonard Gentile.

But apparently some teachers don't agree. Croce said his sense is that "at this point the majority of teachers would vote 'no'" on the contract, mostly because of the salary issue.

Croce said he will attempt to explain to teachers that "while the numbers in and of themselves appear to be little different than before and less than what teachers are deserving of, given the circumstances we have to say we really did o.k."

But while he agrees that the School Committee has no extra money beyond what they offered in the contract, the association leader has questioned the allocation of the city's estimated $2 million in free cash to capital repairs around the city rather than to education and teacher salaries.

When asked if some of this free cash should or could be allocated to education and teacher salaries, Gentile replied, "Some have been given the impression that there's a lot of money hanging around. But when you think of the size of the City's budget, you realize this just isn't true," he said.

"We got every penny we asked for last year and we did pretty well by ourselves," Gentile continued. "Next year, when it comes time to find the six percent, maybe we'll go to the Mayor in the spring and ask that some of the free cash be alloted for this." But this year, Gentile said, "We were given a certain budget and we should stay within the limits of this budget. The city can't continue to ignore capital outlay repairs."

Mayor Mann could not be reached Friday for comment.

Despite the less than hoped for salary offers, Croce considers the contract to contain some important victories for teachers. Unlike the previous contract, Croce says this year's document contains "clearcut and straightforward" language regarding the issues of reductions in force and teacher evaluations. It also maintains current health benefits for school faculty, a victory he adds is not being achieved in surrounding communities.

According to Croce, Mayor Theodore Mann favored putting a "dollar cap" on the amount of funds the City would contribute to the school faculty's health insurance, but the School Committee decided to ignore the push. "Fortunately they agreed with us on that issue," Croce said.

Greater compensation for part-time kindergarten teachers and guaranteed childcare leave for both mothers and fathers are also favorable offers included in the contract, Croce said.

An official vote on the contract, which Croce had initially hoped to have by October 31, will probably not take place now until the beginning of November, the association leader said Friday.

Croce said secretarial resources offered by the Massachusetts Teachers Association (MTA) have alleviated some of the complications resulting from a recent fire in the NTA headquarters, but the absence of the School Committee's lawyer has thus far prevented the two negotiating sides from meeting and reviewing the fine print of the document. This must happen before copies of the contract can be made and distributed to teachers.

Croce said when it is finally distributed, teachers will have two or three days to review the contract before the informational meeting and final vote.

Referring to the delays, Croce said, "We'll just have to wait it out. But it is very frustrating."

Newton parents get view of innovation in schools

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

NEWTON — In the midst of recent pessimistic projections surrounding declining enrollments, fiscal constraints and consolidation, a unique and widespread innovation in the Garden City Schools is a sign that education here is still alive and thriving, school officials and representatives say.

Faculty, teachers and program specialists attending last week's session of the Newton Council of PTAs Roundtable on Education reviewed a number of innovative programs at all levels which they say demonstrate not only that the city's high standard of instruction is continuing, but that teacher enthusiasm and community interest are also prospering.

"It would take two years of PTA meetings like this to present all of the innovative programs that exist," said Director of Secondary Education Elizabeth Quinn.

Although only four individual programs were presented to audience members, the printed outlines and "handouts" presentators passed out at the end of the session revealed that more than 80 innovative curriculum and classroom ideas are now in existence. Director of Elementary Education, Melvin Hines displayed a list of more than 70 such programs at the elementary level alone.

Some of the ideas which the creators say have encouraged and stimulated both teachers and students alike in the system are the television production studio created by English teacher Lynne Rossman at Newton North High School; a simulated community named West Burrington co-created by Gail Zeigler with elementary students at the Burr School; Big Books, songs and in-class plays which implementer and English specialist Carolyn Henderson says help young minds absorb language rhthyms in imagination-expanding ways; a permanent science research laboratory where junior high school students share hands-on materials and the joint teaching efforts of earth science instructors Dan Sweeney and John Devine; and an enrichment program at Newton South through which Phyllis Monderer invites noted and interesting individuals to meet with high school students.

The program creators say that once the innovative seed is planted in one school or classroom, it usually tends to grow toward other teachers and schools. Many tend to attract and involve parents and community members who are intrigued by what the programs have to offer and by what they can contribute.

These new programs and ideas are especially significant "during a time when there is talk of the "system breaking down," and of "schools falling apart," noted Quinn. "They are testimony to a staff and community who say that what is important is that good things are happening to kids."

Custodian contract talks break down

By Lisa J. Adams, Staff Writer

NEWTON — A little more than a week after stormy teacher contract negotiations produced a tentative settlement, a spokesman for school custodial workers says their talks, ongoing since last February, have "broken down." A school spokesman has refuted that claim.

Custodial and cafeteria union president Robert Robards said negotiations broke down last week when school officials failed to come up with a counteroffer to an offer the union proposed three weeks ago. Instead, they indicated it was time to bring in a mediator, Robards said.

"Three weeks ago we made an offer," Robards said. "But instead of a counteroffer today, they wanted further concessions from us. The last we heard from them was an offer to file a joint petition for a mediator. We said no, and they said, 'We're going to file one anyway,'" Robards said.

Assistant Superintendent for Personnel Thomas O'Conor said negotiations have not reached an impasse and that no mediator has been called in.

"As far as I'm concerned, the talks haven't broken down," O'Conor said. "They are going slowly, but we plan to continue negotiating." O'Conor added that both of the parties would have to "agree to disagree" before an impasse could legally be declared and a mediator consulted. This hasn't been done, he said.

Robards also contends that the union has proposed several times that talks be held in public, an offer which he says has been refused by school officials.

O'Conor labeled the union suggestion a "stage show. I don't know where their motivation for this is coming from, but their characterization of the talks is unilateral," O'Conor said. Collective bargaining means "give and take," he said. "In the process of doing that, people say any number of things."

"We asked for public talks at the beginning of the previous contract three years ago," argued Robards. "One hundred and thirty-three people involved in the negotiations are taxpayers," Robards said. "They'd like to know what's going on. And we think all taxpayers should know of the work custodians do."

The club, which meets twice weekly after school under the Triple E Program, is sponsored by advisers Dan Kunitz and Nancy J. Levin of the social studies staff.

Students have been visiting local Republican and Democratic headquarters to get information on issues, such as percentage of federal budget allocated for defense, for health and human services, for housing, and for services for the elderly.

Equipment stolen from Newton Place

NEWTON CORNER — Several pieces of electrical equipment were reported stolen from One Newton Place over the weekend, the four-story building now under construction in Newton Corner.

From the second level, police said someone broke into the area and stole 50 Romex connectors, 75 EMT connectors, 75 EMT couplings, 500 paper tags, 500 tie wraps, 100 100-watt bulbs and 1,000 wire nuts.

Also stolen were a saw mill, various electrical boxes, three hammer drills and 25 electrical circuit boards.

Cars burglarized at parking garage

WEST NEWTON — Four cars were discovered burglarized last week while they were parked at the Martin Mill parking garage at the corner of Washington and Chestnut streets, police said.

According to police, the damage occurred sometime the previous night.

Stolen were a $750 AM/FM cassette stereo and amplifier from a Honda; an AM/FM radio and knapsack from a Ford Escort; a Sanyo AM/FM cassette stereo from a Dodge; and an Audivox equalizer from a Dodge.

Police said windows on three of the cars were smashed to gain entry into the vehicles. The fourth car was left unlocked, records show.

Exposure incidents continue

NEWTON CORNER — An unidentifed man allegedly exposed himself last Monday night to a female pedestrian at the corner of Hibbard Road and Washington Street, police said.

A resident told police she was walking in the area at about 9 p.m. when a man jumped from the bushes and exposed himself in an indecent manner. He was described as white with brown hair, about five-feet, 10-inches tall, of medium build, wearing black, nylon pants with a red stripe and a blue, hooded sweatshirt.

MBTA driver assaulted by rider

NEWTON HIGHLANDS — An MBTA carman was allegedly assaulted Tuesday by a rider who refused to pay his fare, police said.

The assault occurred at about 5:30 p.m. inside an inbound trolley stopped at the Newton Highlands station.

The assailant — described as a white male, about 18 years old, with brown hair and wearing a brown, corduroy jacket — allegedly refused to pay his fare, then spit on the driver and kicked him in the right shin, police said.

He then fled the trolley toward the direction of Walnut Street, police hssaid.

Maine man summoned for exposure

CHESTNUT HILL — A Maine man will be summoned into court for allegedly exposing himself Wednesday night to a woman walking along Commonwealth Avenue near Boston College, police said.

The suspect, a resident of Sacco, Me., was found sitting inside a Ford Bronco at about 10:15 p.m. by Boston College police, who approached the car as it sat parked in front of a Commonwealth Avenue home.

The campus police, acting on information supplied by a woman who claimed the man was exposing himself in an indecent manner, interviewed the man, but did not arrest him.

A court complaint alleging indecent exposure will be filed against him, police said.

Pickpocket incident on bus route

NEWTON CORNER — A Newton woman changing buses at the Newton Corner MBTA stop was the victim of an apparent pickpocket, police said.

Stolen was a black wallet holding about $200 in cash, police said.

The theft occurred at about 4 p.m. Friday as the woman was changing buses and was bumped by a man, who apologized and then left the scene. When the woman stepped on the bus and reached for her MBTA pass, she discovered her wallet missing, police said.

Car tipped over on lawn

NEWTON — A 20-year-old Newton woman who tipped her car on the front lawn of a Florence Street home Friday night was arrested for allegedly driving while intoxicated, police said.

The woman, a Cavanaugh Path resident, was driving her 1971 Dodge Dart eastbound on Florence Street when she swerved and tipped her car over onto its roof on the front lawn of a home, police said.

No injuries were reported in the 10 p.m. accident.

She was scheduled to be arraigned today in Newton District Court.

Teenager injured when car tire blows

NEWTON — A Newton teenager was injured Sunday when she lost control of the car she was driving and struck a Parker Street utility pole.

Police said Jennifer E. Spicer, 17, of 144 Clark St., was driving her 1977 Toyota wagon northbound on Parker Street at about 1:15 a.m. when her right front tire blew, causing her to lose control and collide with a utility pole.

She was treated and released at Newton-Wellesley Hospital for minor injuries, records show.

Bludgeoning injures 2

NEWTON UPPER FALLS — Two men were injured early Monday morning when they were bludgeoned by four stick-wielding assailants who burst into a Newton Upper Falls home and attacked its occupants, police said.

The attack occurred at about 12:45 a.m. inside a Cottage Street home, where five people were gathered watching television. Police would not say what motivated the attack, although at least one of the residents there knew the assailants.

Injured were a 19-year-old male occupant and a 27-year-old West Newton man, who were allegedly struck several times about the head and body with small baseball bats and a wooden, two-by-four plank, police said. They were both treated and released at Newton-Wellesley Hospital.

Using a description of the getaway car, police stopped an eastbound van on Rt. 9 shortly after the alleged attack and arrested four men.

Arraigned and ordered held on $500 cash bail were Charles Inzodda, 22, of Allston, Roderick Inzodda, 23, of Allston, Phillip Warren, 21, of Allston, and William Fitzpatrick, 22, of Brighton. They face charges alleging assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and armed burglary and assault on an occupant.

down the street in pursuit of two burglary suspects. Gurevich yelled out, "Do you want any help?" and joined the chase. Gurevich helped to subdue one suspect, who was resisting arrest. He actually put the handcuffs on the prisoner.

"It was Mr. Robert Gurevich's quick response to what was happening and his willingness to get involved that resulted in the quick apprehension of these burglary suspects," Quinn said.

Officer Brennan, who had chased the suspects over fences and through backyards for quite a distance before he met up with Gurevich commented, "I was pretty much out of breath at the time, and I appreciated the help."

Gurevich responded, commending Brennan, saying, "The officer did a fine job. He ran a long way."

Robert Gorgone, of Cherry Street in West Newton, and Michael Kelleher, of Weston, were in front of the Store 24 in West Newton Square late one night last August when they saw a woman hit by a car so hard that she flew up onto its roof before she fell onto Watertown Street, critically wounded.

When the driver of the car raced away from the scene of the accident, Gorgone and Kelleher were in hot pursuit. They caught up with him two miles away from the scene of the accident and "persuaded" him to come with them to the police.

Quinn commended the two men for "their willingness to become involved and help a person in great need."

Kelleher responded, "I'm glad I could help, but, in a way, I wish it had never happened."

The award recipients were given citations from the city and watches, which were donated by Crime Prevention Commission member Benjamin Rubin.

BC students arraigned on drug dealing count

By Eric Fehrnstrom
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Two suspected Boston College drug dealers who allegedly peddled cocaine and marijuana from a campus dormitory room while keeping written records of their transactions were arraigned Monday in Newton District Court.

Mark L. O'Hanian, 19, of Warwick, R.I., and James P. DeMaris, 21, of Shrewsbury, are senior roommates inside the Hillside dormitory and suspected of running a drug-selling operation that involved the written recording of transactions to would-be buyers.

They pleaded innocent to charges alleging possession of cocaine and marijuana with intent to distribute and were released on personal recognizance. Both men are due back in court Nov. 1.

Their Sunday night arrest followed the first search of a dormitory room "in recent years," said Paul Hennessy, director of communications for the Chestnut Hill college.

The suspects, who are scheduled to graduate next spring, face in-house disciplinary action pending the outcome of judicial proceedings, Hennessy said.

Police who arrived at their room with a search warrant were greeted with several phone calls and visits from unsuspecting students who were allegedly awaiting drug purchases.

A third man was arrested and charged with illegal possession of cocaine.

Brian J. Downey, 21, of Brighton, pleaded innocent to the charge and is due back in court Nov. 1. Police said he is a former Boston College student who was in the room at the time of the raid.

Seized during the search were unknown quantities of cocaine, marijuana, cash and written materials that prosecutors believe are documents for the recording of drug purchases, according to Asst. District Attorney Adrianne Lynch.

About "four or five students" were detained for questioning, but not arrested, Lynch said. She said the search warrant was obtained early Sunday night after a month-long investigation into the students' alleged activities.

Learning disabled work to find jobs

Karen Jacobs started the vocational program.

the dining room looking nice," he explains. "But I'm more leaning toward a job in sports -- like when teams travel, I would pack stuff up and make sure the benches are ready with water. At Newton North, I run water in the time outs and tie ice packs."

The LPS vocational program teaches special needs students job skills and related behavior such as getting to work on time, following instructions, dressing for work, working with others and preparing for job interviews.

"We help prepare our students for the realities of the working world so they can be successfully employed," explains LPS Director of Development Karen Jacobs, who started the vocational program in 1980. "It's a total approach -- we not only teach functional academics but also things like balancing checkbooks, filling out bank forms and hygiene."

Tuition at LPS and the Little People's School, the elementary division established 15 years ago, is funded through state and federal monies. Rather than hiring a variety specialists for a few special needs students, public schools in 85 surrounding communities have found it more cost-efficient to send their kids to the Newton school, one of the largest of its kind in the nation.

"The purpose of our school is to provide for the students' education and vocational training in the hopes they'll get up to a level to go back to their own school systems," says Jacobs, a registered occupational therapist. "And in some cases, that doesn't happen and they stay with us until they graduate."

If students make it to LPS, the secondary school, they focus on life skills. Those skills are taught in workshops -- ranging from child care to car maintenance to computers -- which are structured to simulate "real" employment. Once they select a field in which to specialize, they complete a work/study project in the community before they're ready to graduate and work full-time.

Ann Marie Capstick, 17, hopes to land a job in child care. Inside the LPS child care workshop, she reads a story to several captivated children. Toys fill a cheery room where LPS students care for children of the staff. "I like little kids and I've always babysat," Capstick says. "I just love kids."

Capstick says she feels very lucky to be in the LPS program. "This school has helped me very much with reading and stuff," she explains. "They do a lot for us kids with speech and learning problems."

Students seem to have no qualms about discussing their disabilities. "It's important for the kids to be realistic about it," says Jacobs, president of the Mass. Assn. of Occupational Therapy. "If, for example, they have a speech impediment and they go for a job interview, they have to say, right away, 'I have this disability but I'm highly motivated and it won't interfere with my doing a very good job.'"

Most LPS workshops are also open for business in the community, charging lower-than-average prices for a variety of services.

In the bicycle maintenance workshop, teacher Tim Mast not only shows students how to repair and assemble bicycles, but also supervises tune-ups and other work for customers' bikes. "We charge less than most bike shops for a tune-up," Mast points out, adding the job is usually done for $10 to $15.

The automotive maintenance workshop also tunes up vehicles as well performs oil changes and other mechanical services. Seasonal plants are for sale in the greenhouse at the horticulture workshop which also does landscaping for homeowners and businesses.

The graphic arts workshop will fill resume and business card orders as well as other printing jobs. Businesses needing clerical work such as envelope licking, stapling or typing can hire students from the business skills workshop. The photography workshop does in-house jobs. And the carpentry program completes school renovations as well as operates a small business, Michael Manufacturing Company, which sells finished products to local companies and contracts for outside jobs.

Last year, two of Bob Able's carpentry students graduated with $10-an-hour jobs as apprentice carpenters.

Jacobs says businesses and customers are not afraid to hire students with learning disabilities because all work is done under the close supervision of certified teachers.

On Wednesday, Oct. 24, the entire special needs school, located behind St. Bernard's Parish on Washington Street, West Newton, will hold an open house from 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. to display their skills to the community.

In the workshops, behavior -- more so than skills -- is the focus. "I teach them kitchen preparation work like scrubbing vegetables, hygiene and safety habits," explains Larry Doyle, who supervises the food service workshop which cooks lunch each day for the school. "They may not do all these things on their jobs, but at least they'll know what a boss expects them to do and how to handle a work routine."

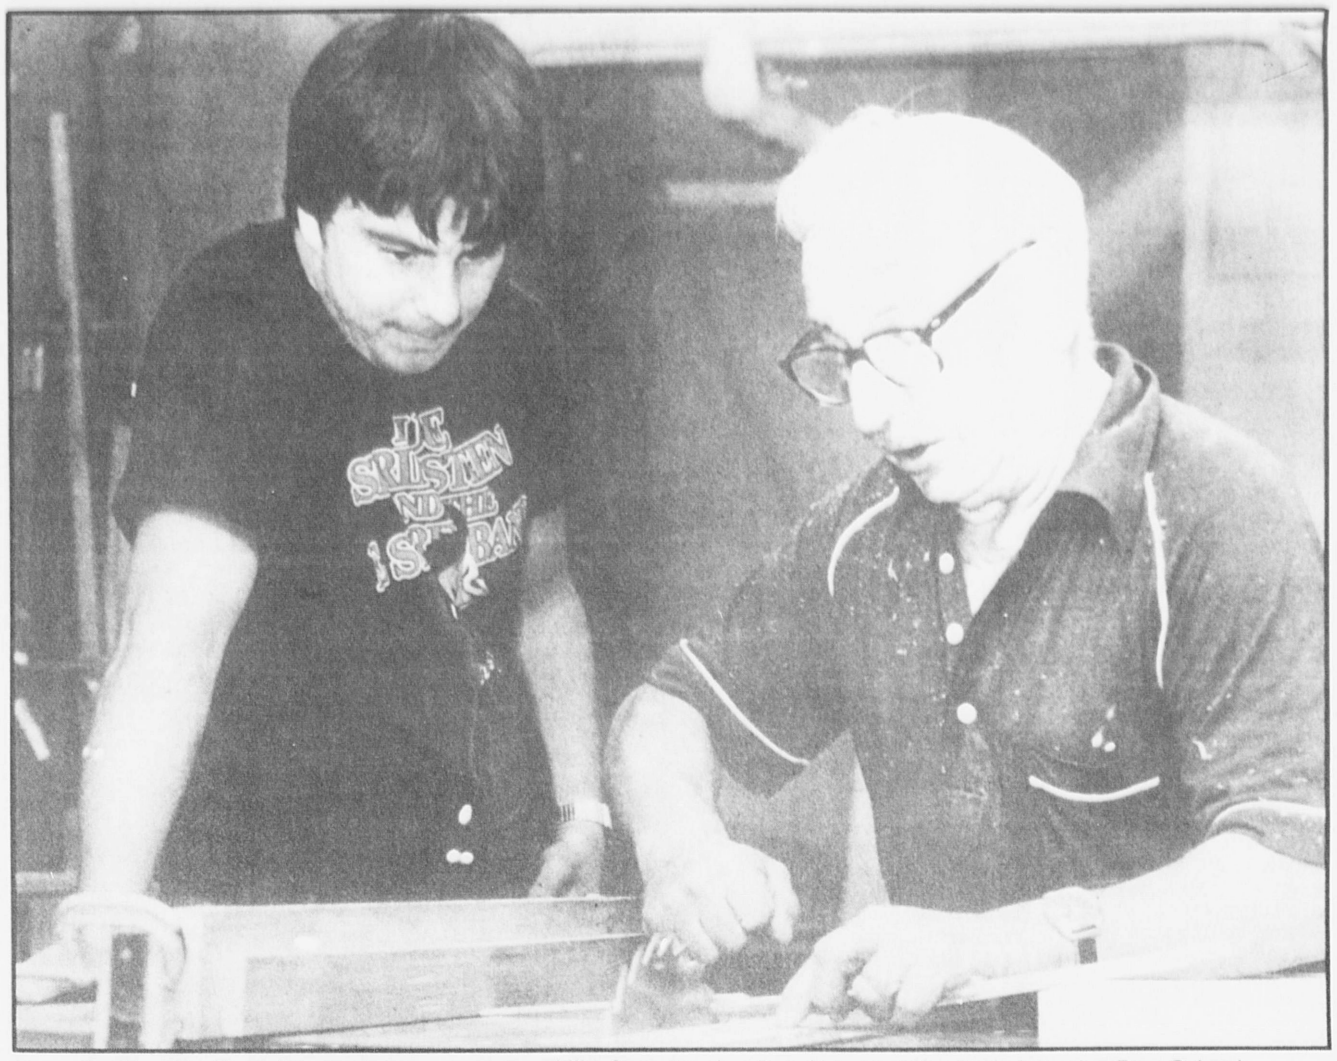

Joseph Banks, 21, is enrolled in the kitchen workshop, although he swears it's last place he hopes to find a job.

"They teach us how to dress neat here and the appropriate attitude," explains Banks, who says he's thinking about a career in computers and may take some computer courses when he graduates from LPS.

Eric Franke, 17, hasn't yet selected his field of specialization. He's torn between two loves. "I'll either be a chef and cook or work in computers," he says. "I like to work with my hands and I like to eat food."

As Jacobs notes, "A chef could make the best Baked Alaska in the world, but if he can't get along with his peers, supervisor or he doesn't have proper hygiene -- he'll fail."

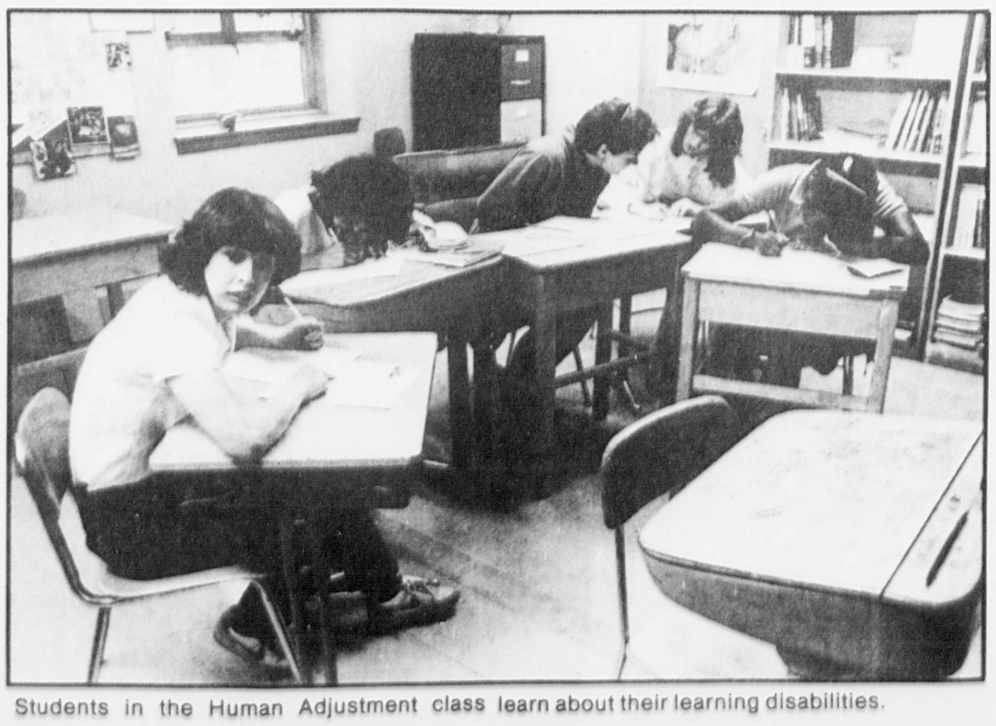

Students at LPS might not be able to make a desert that would be served at the Ritz Carlton but they'll probably be able to support themselves with employment so they can dine at posh restaurants once in awhile.

Larry Smith, 20, (l) picks up some carpentry skills from teacher Bob Able (r) at Newton's Learning Prep School.

Childcare teacher Inez Yosovitz reads a story to one of the staff's children, cared for by LPS students.

South garners 2nd place in DCL

By Hank Hryniewicz
Sports Correspondent

NEWTON — Any good team can have an off game once in a while, but it's the great team which can come away with a victory despite a sluggish performance. That's exactly what Newton South High's gridders did Saturday versus a gritty team from Bedford.

The Lions moved into second place in the Dual County League thanks to a 24-15 victory over the visiting Buccaneers and upped their record to 2-1 in the league and 5-1 overall.

Newton South entered the game as a heavy favorite and it seemed rightly so on its first drive when the Lions put together a seven-play, 60-yard scoring march which saw junior halfback Kevin "T.D." Rollins carry the ball six times, including a four-yard lunge into paydirt to give his team a 6-0 edge. Rollins finished the game with three touchdowns to give him 15 on the season. He piled up 168 yards rushing on 32 attempts and played some solid defense at his middle linebacker's spot.

"He's a hell of an athlete," said Newton South coach Art Kojoyian of Rollins. "He's as good on defense as he is on offense too. He's just a good ballplayer."

Newton's defense contained the Bucs' running game on its first two possessions and despite moving the ball from their own 35 to the Bedford 20 yardline, the Lions couldn't get the ball any closer to the end zone on their second offensive drive.

Neither squad could put things together offensively at the start of the second quarter, but Newton South finally put six more points on the board when senior quarterback Steve Altman connected with tight end Ben Hochberger for a 56-yard touchdown strike at the midway point of the second period. It was Altman's sixth touchdown pass of the season. The 12-0 advantage stood up until the halftime break.

In the third quarter Newton South started to go flat and Bedford came out of the locker room fired up. Sophomore running back Herman Rice got the Bucs moving when he returned the opening kickoff of the half 50 yards to give his team's offensive unit the ball on Newton South's 30.

Six running plays later Bedford handed the ball back to Newton South on the 10 yardline after failing to convert on a fourth-and-three play. But the Lions returned the favor on their first play from scrimmage when Rollins had trouble handling the handoff from Altman and coughed the ball up to Bedford on his own 20.

The Bucs took advantage of the opportunity after a 10-yard penalty when senior quarterback Scott McArdle dropped back and threw the ball to Rice, who high-jumped his way over two Lion defenders to put his team on the board and put an exclamation point on the 30-yard scoring play. Mike DeMattio's extra point cut Newton South's lead to five points, 12-7, with 5:53 left in the third frame.

Then the shocking reality of high school football struck Kojoyian and his team squarely in the head. After an unsuccessful attempt to move the ball by the offense, the Lions learned that anything can happen on any given day when Bedford took the ball on its own 40 and put the leather into the end zone three plays later. A pair of 26-yard gains by senior John Bellino and Rice put the ball on the Lions' nine and Rice took the ball on the next snap and carried it in for the score. Bellino scored on the two-point conversion and suddenly the Bucs held a 15-12 advantage with 2:15 left in the third.

Enter, "T.D." Rollins.

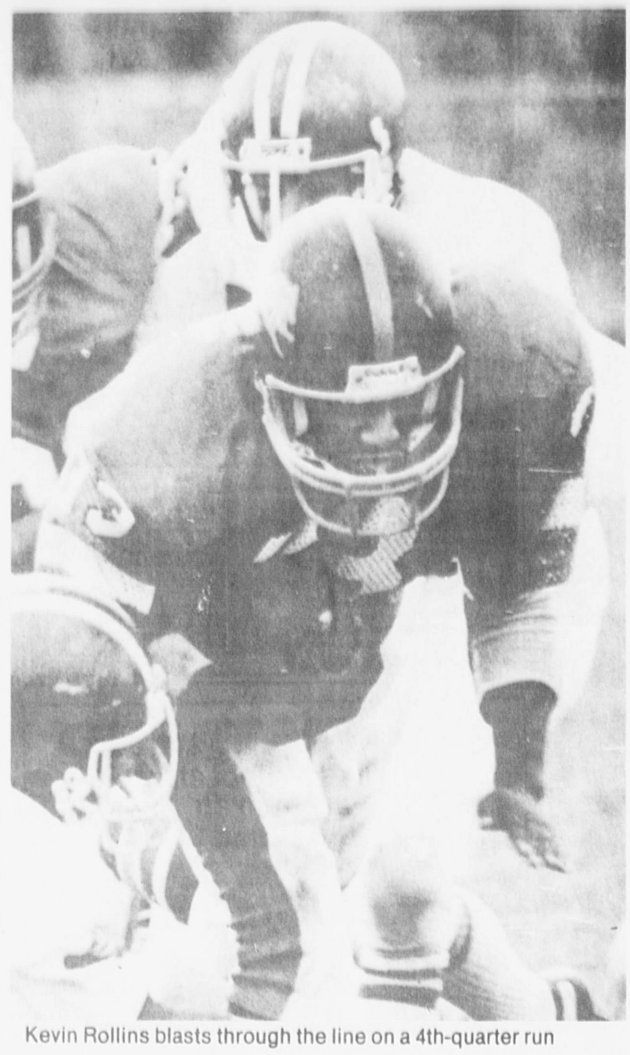

Rollins sparked his club with a 36-yard kickoff return to his own 46. Then he moved the ball 15 yards on two carries to set up a 20-yard pass completion by Altman to tight end Kevin Houlihan. Rollins got the next two calls and on the second crossed the plane on a six-yard rush to give the Lions an 18-15 lead with just 40 seconds left in the quarter.

The score remained the same for the first eight minutes of the final stanza with neither team making any scoring threats. But Rollins put on a show and carried the ball on every snap of a seven-play drive which ended on a two-yard dive to the right for the game-clinching score with seven seconds left in the game. The play gave Newton South a 24-15 win and second place in the league behind Boston Latin, which remained undefeated with a 30-14 victory over Acton-Boxboro Saturday.

In addition to the outstanding performance by Rollins, Darvell Huffman also played well in the backfield for the winners with 64 yards on 10 carries. On defense, senior tackle Tom Rogers played an inspired game to help keep Bedford in check most of the way.

After the game Kojoyian commented on his team's performance. "There's no question about it, we were flat today. We were due for a flat game, but it's nice to know we can play flat and win. We did what we had to but the team was just going through the motions for most of the game."

Bedford dropped to 1-4 in the league and 2-4 overall with the loss.

Bourland has hat trick in 10th Tiger triumph

BROOKLINE — Peter Bourland notched a hat trick to lead the Newton North soccer team to a 3-0 win in a Suburban League match on Monday.

After a scoreless first half, the Tigers showed why they are in first place in the league by taking advantage of Brookline mistakes.

"We had pressured them throughout the whole game without getting any real opportunities," said Coach Roger Brown, "but we finally got some breaks in the second half."

At the 15-minute mark of the second period, the Tigers were awarded a penalty shot when a Brookline defender grabbed the ball with his hands. "We had a couple of deflections, and there really was some hot action in front of the net, so their kid just tried to save a goal," explained Brown.

Bourland converted the kick for a 1-0 lead. Eight minutes later Brian Scales passed to the striker off an indirect kick for the second goal. The ball went into the upper right hand corner from the 12-yard line.

Two minutes later, Newton North pressured another Brookline fullback into grabbing the ball in the penalty area, and Bourland fired in another penalty kick to the right lower corner.

"It was a very aggresive game," said Brown, "and they were really ready for us. They were 4-0-1 in their last five games, and I was really worried about this one. Coming off a great effort in both the Brockton and Cambridge games, this would have been a natural time for a let-up, but we got great leadership from the captains, and we stayed in our game plan."

Gary Scott earned the win between the posts, making seven saves. Brown praised the play of wing fullbacks Howie Schwartz and Tom Casey, who contributed offensive punch as well as solid defense.

Now 10-3-1, the Tigers are one point ahead of Waltham in the Suburban League race, and travel to North Quincy on Wednesday.

Peter Bourland scored a pair of goals to lead Newton North to a big 3-1 win over Cambridge, Rindge and Latin on Friday.

Bourland got credit for a goal 34 minutes into the first half on a fluke play. He took a throw-in deep in Cambridge territory, and the ball bounced before the losing goalie grabbed it. The netminder wasn't aware that he was on the goal line, and took two steps back right into his own net to tie the game.

Don Natale scored the eventual winner about midway through the second half on a goal set up by Artie Aaron.

Bourland intercepted a pass back to the goalie and went in alone with 10 minutes left in the game for a 3-1 final score.

Pee Wee AA's own 3-0 mark

BURLINGTON — Five different players notched goals as the Newton Pee Wee AA team ran its record to 3-0 in Youth Hockey action on Saturday with a 5-3 victory over North Middlesex.

Posting the scores were Ken Golden, Doug Leone, Marcello Gentile, Chris Cucinotta and John Clark. Contributing assists were Dan Katz, Eric Haley and Michael Gannon.

In their previous outing, the Pee Wee AA's earned their second consecutive shutout of the season, a 10-0 victory over Watertown. Katz scored a hat trick for the winners, while Golden and Gannon each put home a pair. Single goals were scored by Gentile, Haley and Marty Burke.

Marc Cappello and Peter Abucunas shared the netminding duties for Newton.

In other action, last Thursday, the Midget A's finally surrendered a goal after four games, but it was of no consequence as Newton earned a 7-1 victory over Lexington at Fessenden Rink.

Peter Kalamvokis and Chris Pike led the winners with a pair of goals each, while single goals came from Billy MacDougall, Rob Ingham and Dominic Bianchi.

Drew's interception key as Tigers nip Leominster

By Roy LeBlanc
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Geoff Drew grabbed his second interception of the day on the Newton North six yardline with 56 seconds left to nail down a 13-7 victory for the Tigers over Leominster at Dickinson Stadium on Saturday. It was the Blue Devils' sixth turnover of the day, and by far the most costly.

Drew was a horse on offense as well, carrying the ball 20 times for 80 yards, the best afternoon a Newton North back has had this year. Quarterback Rusty Halloran took care of the scoring duties, throwing a TD pass to Steve DelGrosso (three receptions for 60 yards) and running for the other.

Despite those numbers, the Tigers were clinging to a tenuous 13-7 lead when the Devils took over on their own 30 for their final shot at the goalline with 1:55 left in the game.

They had already shown the capability of scoring from anywhere on the field when Matt Mazzaferro hit Candido Morales for their only TD from midfield on his first play after replacing starter Shawn Bunnell. The latter had a rough day, throwing six times. Two were complete to his own players, three went to Tiger defenders.

On the final drive, Mazzaferro, a junior, went quickly and confidently to work. He hit Peter Charpentier three straight times for a total of 37 yards. From the North 33, however, Mazzaferro tried to get a little too much too quickly and overthrew his receiver. Drew was there, cutting left to right on the six and picked off the pass. He carried it back to the 34 and the win was safely tucked away.

It was unquestionably the Tigers' (2-5) best performance of the season. Their other win came against a hapless Cambridge Rindge and Latin club, but this time Newton beat a real football team. The Blue Devils were hurting offensively, but their defense was solid and they had a size advantage in the line.

Defense was the key to the win for Newton. The Tigers picked off four Leominster passes and recovered two fumbles. Just as importantly, they completely shut down the Blue Devil running attack, which led to the passes, and hence, the interceptions.

With its running attack taken away, Leominster couldn't sustain a drive all afternoon. Only once did the Devils put together three first downs on the same possession, and Drew put a stop to that with his first interception on the North 29.

"Defensively, Newton North has always had a proud tradition," said Tiger coach Peter Capodilupo. "I hope we rediscovered that."

Offensively, the Tigers were able to move the ball all afternoon, although they didn't put it in the end zone as often as they would have liked. Only twice were they held without a first down.

They showed what kind of a day it might be on their second possession when they put together a 10-play, 76-yard drive for a score. They even overcame a 15-yard clipping penalty on Drew's interception return which created the possession. That put them at their own 24 instead of midfield.

The big play was a 34-yard strike from Halloran to DelGrosso, perhaps the best ball the QB has thrown all season. That put the Tigers on the Leominster 32, and the ground game went to work from there. Drew, Ottavio Mariano and Chris Rutan took turns, bulling it down to the 19.

The drive seemed to stall there, but on fourth down from the 13, Halloran found DelGrosso wide open going right to left in the end zone. Chris Bercury's kick made it 7-0.

The Tigers turned the ball over themselves on their next two possessions (the second on a meaningless fumble right at the half), but early in the third they went to work again.

Another turnover set things up, as Alex DeNucci pounced on Matt Aubuchon's fumble at the Leominster 47. Six plays later, North was in the end zone.

Halloran again came up with the big plays he needed, including a 22-yard pass to Chris Rutan and the seven-yard ramble around right end for the score.

"We just don't go anywhere fast enough," said disappointed Devil coach Mike Vaillette. "We use a lot of plays, long drives, and sooner or later there is a mistake."

"When a team's not used to winning, sometimes you just need one tough one like that," said Capodilupo.

Offensively, the coach cited Drew, Rutan and Halloran. On defense, he praised linemen Scott Hamblet and Joe Fresolo, along with the backs.

The Tigers don't get much time to enjoy their victory, as they host undefeated Arlington of the Greater Boston League on Saturday at 1:30 p.m.

Tradition guides North girls in 14-0 soccer titular pursuit

By Mike Flanagan
Sports Correspondent

NEWTON — Most successful girls' soccer teams seem to have one thing in common: a head coach who started the program and stuck with it.

Eventually the wins start mounting up, and the game becomes popular in the town. A youth soccer program usually follows and a feeder system develops.

Newton North and Coach Barry "Fuzzy" Howland are a textbook example of this trend. His Tigers are rolling along at a 14-0 clip this season, and have to be considered in the tournament picture. Perennial powers Wellesley, Needham, Winchester and Concord-Carlisle all have established strong teams with the help of feeder systems, and it appears that the Tigers are close to joining this elite group.

Howland recognizes the strides that his team has made is in part due to the youth program. "This year I'd have to say that the reason for our success is the leadership from our captains, Jackie Kinsella and Jean Vendice, as well as the overall amount of people I've received from the Newton Youth Soccer program."

Howland was there at the inception of the Newton North boys' soccer program, and took over the girls' team when it was started. This is his 11th year at the helm for the Tigers.

He points to two freshman as products of the feeder system. "Angie McKenna and Diane Tormey have both played big roles for us so far this year. Most of their skills are developed and they have a feel for the game. It makes it that much easier on me coaching them."

Howland this year saw 70 young girls try out for three squads. He carries 26-30 girls on his varsity squad and that depth could prove quite important in tourney play.

The forward line for Newton consists of seven players. McKenna is the striker, and she has scored four times and added three assists. Flanking her are senior Tina Rosenthal and junior Kristin Hughes. The latter is the second-leading scorer on the team with eight goals and seven assists while Rosenthal has four goals and five assists.

Marilyn Schultz, only a sophomore, is the backup striker while Debbie Wilgoren and Cheryl Hager see plenty of action on the wings as Howland plays all his personnel evenly. Another girl, Mara Melangalis, returned to the team on Tuesday after recovering from a broken arm.

"We're really deep up there," said Howland, "and that means we don't have to depend on one girl to have a great day.

"The key is the play of the halfbacks," stresses Howland, and it's easy to see why. Kinsella is a gem in the middle, and seven other players have seen action for the Tigers.

Kinsella, a senior, is in a tight race with Waltham forward Kelly Vaughn for the Suburban League scoring title. The two were tied a week ago Monday when Vaughn got a goal and a pair of assists to total 24 points. Kinsella has 10 goals and 11 assists.

Carolyn Natale (three goals, six assists) and Tormey are the wing midfielders while Marian Mann, a junior, and sophomore Ann Ming are strong backups. More depth comes from senior Kim Robinson and sophomore Amy Drew. Carol Ventura, a junior, has just returned to the team after being out with mononucleosis.

"Although they haven't gotten a lot of mention," said Howland, "the fullbacks have played really well." Janet Burke was moved back from the front line, and she's doing an excellent job at stopper. She has been marking the other team's top player.

Kendra Daley is the team's sweeper while co-captain Vendice and Rebecca Locke are the wing fullbacks. Sophomore Stephanie Koontz and Cheryl Mack, a junior, have both played exceptionally in some important situations for Howland.

The coach's main worry at the beginning of the season was goalkeeping, but a pair of untested juniors, Laura Yellen and Liz Speliotis, have erased any doubt. "They're both improving with every game," said Howland.

Yellen and Speliotis haven't had to face many shots thanks to their teammates. Howland figures that his team has outshot its opponents, 35-3, on the average. Waltham recorded the most shots on the Tigers this year with 10 last week.

With the success Newton North has been having, there comes an opportunity to play all of the varsity players. "I'm not afraid to use any of them," contends the coach, "and I'll have 26-30 kids ready for the tournament. You never know when someone is going to get injured."

If Newton plays any games like last year's 120-minute contest with Wakefield, they'll need all those players. Last year the Tigers lost in the second overtime on a corner kick, 1-0, so they'll be ready to avenge that loss come the end of the season.

"Our first goal, however, is to win the Suburban League. After that we'll worry about the tourney," stressed Howland.

Lancer volleyballers seek crown

BOSTON -- Newton Catholic may only have one fall sports program this year, but it's making the most of it as the volleyball team ran its record to 10-1 on Thursday with a 2-0 victory over Mission in Roxbury.

The home club, in the midst of a rebuilding year, was never a threat to the Lancers, who won by scores of 15-1, 15-2.

The spiking of Andrea Fremault and Joanne Abruzzi, along with the setting of Shari Calabro, helped spark Newton to the win. Angela Bove and Kerry MacDougall provided some excellent passes, while Cheryl Gagnon served well.

With the big leads, Lancer coach Rose Bertucci got to substitute often and got good performances off the bench from Angela Canty and Jean Deffely.

The Lancers are on top of the Catholic Suburban League's South Division, just ahead of second-place Cathedral, which comes to Newton next Thursday. A win by the Lancers will clinch the title.

Newton North climbed back over the .500 mark with a 2-1 victory over Suburban League rival Waltham on Wednesday. The Tigers jumped out in front with a 15-7 decision in the first game.

Senior outside hitter Dina Steinberg and senior offside hitter Debbie Visco were standouts for North. The winners also got good serving from Visco and sophomore Wendy Rogers.

Newton South also came out on top on Wednesday, beating Lincoln-Sudbury rather easily in Sudbury. The Lions won in two straight games, 15-1, 15-9.

South got excellent games from a pair of seniors who are out for the team for the first time. Denise Hill had a good afternoon spiking the ball, while setter Kelly Norman had a steady performance. Sophomore setter Jen Lerman also played well.

PROTECTION

When you're older you'll know what it's like.

The countless hours alone. The phone that never rings. The children who are so busy with their own lives. You'll also realize how important the work we do is.

United Way agencies help tens of thousands of elderly citizens in Eastern Massachusetts. They provide visiting nurses. Home health care. Protective services. And maybe most importantly – companionship.

Help us help the elderly. After all, if you don't start setting a precedent now, how can you expect others to help you later?

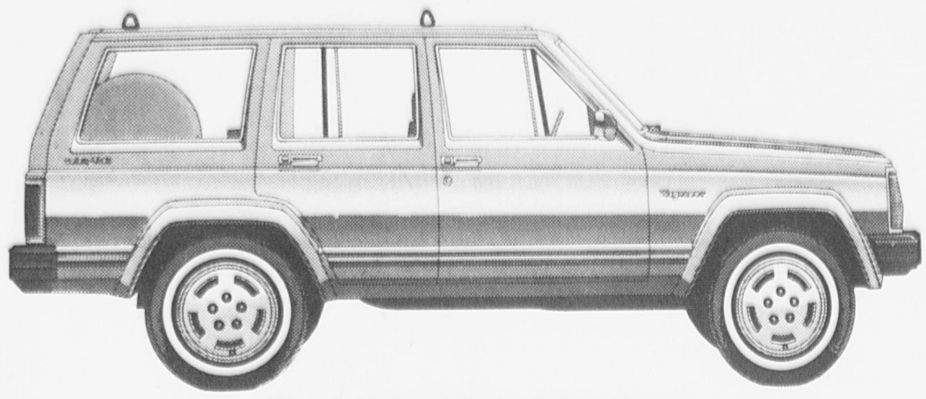

UNITED WAY of Massachusetts Bay

Thanks to you it works for all of us.

Each contestant will be given a free pumpkin to carve with his or her own tools and decorations. Winners will be chosen for originality, creativity and "spookiness."

In addition to the craft of pumpkin carving, growers of these huge gourds will compete to see who has cultivated the largest. An award goes to the winner.

Admission to both events is free.

For information, call (203) 868-0563.

In Essex Junction, Vt., the 4th Annual Craft Workers show will take place on Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 27-28.

The Audubon Society of New Hampshire will offer a three hour autumnal cruise of Great Bay in the Portsmouth area, aboard The Heritage, on Saturday, Oct. 27.

Admissions are $10 for adults, $6 for children.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — When you get behind the wheel of your average American car in 10 or 15 years, you may be able to tell where you are day or night by the push of a button.

You need not worry about the car quitting without warning because its electronic trouble detector will be monitoring all systems in time to warn you of an impending failure.

You should be able to adjust the car's ride with the flick of a switch for city driving or highway cruising. The car's electronically controlled transmission will shift gears so smoothly you won't notice it.

The combination of super streamlining, a lightweight plastic body and a turbocharged diesel engine with ceramic pistons may be able to get you more than 100 miles to a gallon of fuel.

That's the outlook provided by two Ford Motor Co. officials in a detailed analysis, published in Science magazine, of technological trends for American automobiles.

But Emmett Horton, director of Ford's technical staffs, and Dale Compton, vice president for research, said whether all these advances become reality will depend in large part on the price of fuel. The increased costs of the car of the '90s must be offset largely by the money you save at the filling station.

Major fuel economy advances already have taken place, Horton and Compton said. Cars produced last year obtained on the average mileage 83 percent better than those made in 1974. And Horton and Compton said the figure will be a full 100 percent next year.

Much of that improvement has been accomplished by reducing the weight of cars, but Horton and Compton said improved engine design, electronic controls, better transmissions, streamlining and improved matching of components also have been factors.

In 1975, the average car weighed 3,800 pounds. In 1985, the average weight will be 2,700 pounds. Reduced car size has helped shave pounds as has increased use of aluminum, plastics and high-strength steel.

Horton and Compton said the technology of gasoline engines has increased dramatically since 1975, thanks in large part to improved combustion chambers that use electronic control systems to deliver the precise amount of fuel required for specific conditions.

Engineers have closed the mileage gap between gasoline engines and diesels, but the Ford officials said the next-generation diesel will regain some of that advantage.

Front-wheel drive transaxles have replaced conventional rear-wheel drive transmissions in many cars for a mileage improvement averaging 7 percent.

Reducing the aerodynamic drag of the car also has had an impact. Horton and Compton said the cars of the '90s will be much more streamlined.

Those automobiles of the next decade will no longer need front-end grilles, thanks to side-entry cooling systems now under development.

In fact, the Ford officials said the use of ceramic components in future diesel engines may eliminate the need for liquid cooling systems altogether. Ceramics may reduce internal friction so much that engineers might even be able to do away with engine lubrication systems.

The cars of the next decade will use far more plastics reinforced with glass or graphite fibers than are in use today to produce weight reductions of up to 60 percent and increase durability. The composite materials will be bonded with new adhesives as elimination of steel components does away with the need for welding.

The microelectronics revolution, which already has resulted in major changes in cars, will have an even greater impact on cars of the '90s, the Ford officials said.

Transmissions in the next decade, for example, will be electronically controlled for smooth, indiscernable shifts from one gear to another.

The performance of engine accessories such as the alternator, cooling fan, power steering pump and air conditioning compressor also will be controlled electronically to improve their efficiency.

"The vehicle's fully electronic instrument panel would provide the driver with constant monitoring of all vehicle and power train operating conditions and the onboard diagnostic system would warn of impending or actual malfunctioning," Horton and Compton said.

"A push of a button would pinpoint the vehicle's position on the highway and provide guidance instructions and suggested operating conditions to enable the driver to arrive safely, quickly and economically at his destination."

At 59, Dave Humphrey is racing grandfather

By Mike Scandura

SEEKONK (UPI) — Dave Humphrey doesn't hestitate when asked why he prefers racing midgets and spring cars as opposed to traditional stock cars, which are significantly larger and, in the eyes of many, safer.

"The competition is closer ... it's wheel to wheel." he says. "The tracks are small, usually one-quarter, one-third or half a mile, and the cars go up to 140 mph," he says, then adds, "The closer the better."

Now, that might not seem unusual, except for one small detail. Humphrey, a life-long Seekonk resident is 59 years old, an age when most men would be content to take their children and grandchildren for a quiet ride in the country. At sane speeds.

He does enjoy his family, which includes both children and grandchildren, during the week. On weekends, though, he's anything but sedate as he takes off for tracks all over the Northeast and Canada.

Humphrey has been doing that for some 37 years now, ever since he got out of the Army in 1947. The obvious question, though, is why he continues at his age.

"I still enjoy the challenge, the competition," he says. "I'm racing now with the sons of a lot of guys I used to race with in the past. They figure if they can beat me, they're ready to move up to the front."

Which is easier said than done.

While Humphrey doesn't have the big name of a Mario Andretti or an A.J. Foyt, he's carved out a solid reputation and has been a dominant driver in the Northeastern Midget Racing Association.

Six times he's won the association championship and eight times he's finished second in the standings, including last year. He's captured a total of 64 NEMA features — 42 more than anybody else on the circuit — and he's won track championships at Seekonk, Norwood and West Peabody, Mass., and New London, Conn.

Humphrey has rubbed elbows with the "big boys," specifically in the early 1960s when he raced sprint cars with the likes of Foyt, Andretti, Don Branson and Parnelli Jones. He even finished third in the 1960 United Racing Club point standings.

But a shot at the big time, the Indy car circuit, has eluded him.

"I almost had a ride in the 1961 Indy 500, but it didn't materialize," he recalls. "I was content racing where I was because it was difficult to be away when my (four) children were growing up. To race on a Saturday in Milwaukee, for example, you had to leave on a Wednesday."

Thus, Humphrey has made a name for himself at over 100 tracks — like the Seekonk Speedway (where he started in 1947); Star Speedway in Epping, N.H.; Thompson (Conn.) Speedway; and Westboro (Mass.) Speedway — while driving midgets, three-quarter midgets, sprint cars, stock cars and super-modifieds.

"Once I returned from the Army, there was nothing to do," he says, recalling his start. "The Seekonk Speedway had opened the year before (1946) and I went over to see it one day and said 'This is for me.'

"Eventually, I went looking for a ride, somebody had a car nobody wanted to drive and I jumped right in," he says.

Humphrey won his first feature at Seekonk in 1949. But during those early years, he didn't exactly jump into a lot of money.

"In those days you got $100 for winning a feature and the driver's share was 40 percent," he says. "Today, a feature win can bring over $1,000."

Even so, the money isn't enough to make a living, especially since the season only runs from May to September.

The myths of John Dillinger

50 years later, G-men still carry vivid memories of the famous stakeout

By Beth Austin

CHICAGO (UPI) — Their names are the stuff of a hundred late shows: Pretty Boy Floyd. Machine Gun Kelly. Bonnie and Clyde. Baby Face Nelson. And John Dillinger.

They were Dust Bowl desperadoes, folk heroes for a Depression-racked nation. They struck at the rich, the banks, and the government that led a nation from prosperity to sudden poverty.

Even 50 years ago, they were figures from another age — outlaw bandits striking back against a society that had shut them out. And they created legends that overshadowed the trail of blood they left behind.

One legend stands out — that of John Dillinger, Public Enemy No. 1.

His story began on a small farm outside Indianapolis, where John Herbert Dillinger was born on June 22, 1903. It officially ended in an alley outside Chicago's Biograph Theater in a blaze of gunfire on July 22, 1934.

The myth was building before the blood cooled.

"There were little kids were tearing up scraps of paper, wiping up his blood and selling it for 10 cents each," recalls Raymond C. Suran, one of the federal agents who was at the scene.

Suran disputes arguments that it was not Dillinger who died, saying he was with the man who first identified the body — Dillinger's father.

"He was looking at John, and tears were rolling out of his eyes," Suran said.

On that sweltering July night 50 years ago, John Dillinger was the most wanted man in America. The Indiana National Guard had offered to use tanks,airplanes and poison gas to bring him to justice, and the American Legion proposed arming 30,000 of its members to capture him.

The Department of Justice was under heavy public pressure. In a 14-month crime spree, Dillinger had freed 10 criminals from the Indiana State Penitentiary by smuggling in guns, and he had broken out of the Lake County, Ind., jail by threatening guards with a fake pistol carved out of wood and stained with shoe polish.

The Dillinger gang pulled off a string of Midwestern bank robberies, netting $307,000 — an enormous Depression-era sum — and leaving 10 people dead. Dillinger was indicted for an Indiana murder, although one woman swore Dillinger was with her in Florida at the time.

The search intensified after April 1934 when G-men, led by special agent Melvin Purvis, raided the gang's hideout in the Wisconsin north woods, the Little Bohemia resort. While agents raked the resort with gunfire, killing a 35-year-old cook, Dillinger and most of his gang escaped out the back.

The Little Bohemia fiasco prompted two senators to chastise J. Edgar Hoover and sparked headlines such as "Urge Purvis Ouster" and "Demand Purvis Quit In Dillinger Fiasco."

So Purvis was willing when a Chicago madam, Anna Sage, came to his office with a proposition. Miss Sage, a native of Romania, was facing deportation as an undesirable alien. She hoped to win clemency — and part of the bounty on Dillinger's head — by offering to set up him for the FBI.

The plan was simple.

She told Purvis one of her girls, Polly Hamilton, was seeing a man who called himself Jimmy Lawrence — a big-spending, sharp-dressing man who looked just like Dillinger. Miss Sage offered to tip Purvis off the next time "Lawrence" and his girlfriend went to the movies.

Purvis agreed and the trap was set.

The call came July 22. Miss Sage told Purvis the couple was going to one of two theaters, the Marbro or the Biograph. Purvis sent out his men but did not call in the Chicago Police Department, considering it solely a federal matter.

Purvis, stationed outside the Biograph, spotted Anna Sage in a burnt-orange outfit that looked red in the glow of the theater marquee — an accident of light that later earned her the name, "The Lady in Red."

"When Purvis saw Dillinger and his girlfriend and Anna Sage go into the theater, he telephoned," said retired agent Suran, who was stationed at the other movie house.

Suran and his partner raced over to the Biograph to wait for the end of the movie, "Manhattan Melodrama;" a story of a rough-living gangster, a tough-minded district attorney, and the moll who loved them both.

"It was the longest two hours I ever spent in my life," Suran told United Press International in a phone interview from his California home.

While the movie was running, the theater manager, unnerved by the plainclothes G-men loitering outside, called Chicago police to say he thought a gang was planning to hold up the place.

"While we were in the back, the police department came around and their detectives came out, pulled a sawed-off shotgun," Suran said. "We immediately threw up our hands and yelled 'FBI!'"

One of the Chicago cops told his partner: "'Find out who he is before you kill him,'" Suran said.

The autopsy said the dead man's fingerprints were partially obliterated — which French called a "fairly common" ploy for criminals of the era. But he said the fingerprints taken matched Dillinger's FBI records in Washington.

"We've still got Dillinger's prints here, and the fingerprint identification is quite clear," he said. "We had a great deal of reputation riding on this particular case, and for anyone to imply that we would have been in any way slipshod is ridiculous."

Nash's claims were backed up by Blackie Audett, a member of the Dillinger gang who told Nash Dillinger escaped to the West, where he bought a small farm, married and raised a family.

But Suran says he has no doubt the man he saw lying dead in that Chicago alley was Dillinger, because of the look in the eyes of the outlaw's father when Suran showed him the dead man's body.

"When his daddy came out, I was assigned to take him to the mortuary. The streets were so jammed we could hardly get through. They let me take Mr. Dillinger, and I never will forget. We went in and stood by the body, and he was looking at John, and tears were rolling out of his eyes," Suran said.

"And he said, 'John, you were a good boy.' That was a very sad experience for me, to know what was going through his old man's heart — he'd raised a good kid, and his kid went bad."

One thing is certain. John Dillinger — dead or alive — found a spot in American mythology.

Part of his mystique, "the reluctance of the American public to let go of the Dillinger image," was created by the outlaw himself, French said. "He had a flair for the dramatic."

Once, while escaping after a bank robbery, Dillinger lined up the bank tellers on the getaway car's running board to guard against police fire.

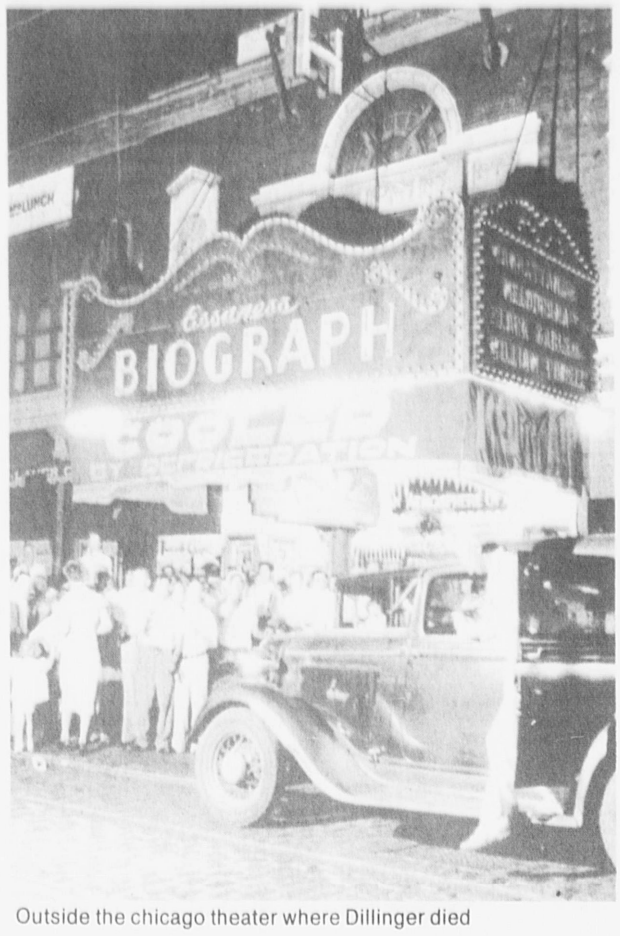

"It was a chilly day, and the girls on the running board were getting cold," French said. "Dillinger insisted on stopping the car and putting a coat on one of them.

"I think people identified with that sort of bravado. At the time of the Depression, here's somebody who's taking the money and running, and thumbing his nose at society."

On this point, Nash agreed. "Dillinger is a folk hero today and he was a folk hero then. He was a farmboy from the flatlands of Indiana, who stood against a system that was crushing a whole way of life underfoot."

A half-century later, the legend of the brazen outlaw lingers, wiping out the image of the gun-toting robber.

"Time is the great healer, I guess," French said. "I think it tends to gloss over our memories, tends to erase the viciousness or the cruelty of the gangster era, and replace it with the cocky smile."

'Never trust a woman or an automatic pistol' Dillinger, above, should have taken his own advice

Dillinger 50 years ago

On that sweltering July night 50 years ago, John Dillinger was the most wanted man in America. The Indiana National Guard had offered to use tanks, airplanes and poison gas to bring him to justice, and the American Legion proposed arming 30,000 of its members to capture him.

Hypnotized witnesses

Boon or danger to legal rights

By William Poole

BOSTON (UPI) — The last surviving victim of the Boston Strangler, under hypnosis and truth serum, nearly 20 years ago recalled the terror she felt when "all that green jumped at me."

"Gee, doctor, we better take a look at the green man," a police detective present at the drug-aided hypnosis session with the woman told Dr. Leo Alexander, a psychiatrist.

That clue led to Albert DeSalvo, the rapist whom police knew as the "green man" because he carried out his crimes dressed in green overalls.

DeSalvo, then under psychiatric observation at Bridgewater State Hospital, confessed to the strangling of 13 women — aged 19 to 85 — from 1962 to 1964 in the greater Boston area.

The sensational murders attracted worldwide attention and their solution, using hypnosis in part to enhance the memory of a witness, was regarded as a milestone.

But was it?

Recently, the so-called Hillside Strangler apparently was able to outwit two psychiatrists who questioned him under hypnosis.

Kenneth Bianci, whose murderous spree in the late 1970s left 13 women dead in California and Washington, managed to convince the two specialists he was suffering from a multiple personality disorder. But other doctors were not fooled. Bianchi is now serving six life terms in prison.

Hypnosis lost some of its glitter in the Hillside Strangler case. But the case served to signal the perennial conflict among law enforcement, judicial medical specialists about the use of hypnosis in criminal investigations.

Currently, there is widespread disagreement about hypnotism of witnesses and the admissibility and validity of their testimony in court.

Last year, the Massachusetts Supreme Court sought the middle ground in a ruling that set strict guidelines for the use of hypnosis on potential witnesses.

The Massachusetts high court said, in effect, that police could hypnotize witnesses, but they could only present in court testimony obtained from them before the hypnotism procedures were used.

In 1982, the California Supreme Court ruled all hypnotized witnesses must be excluded from giving evidence in court. Under that court's decision, a witness cannot even testify about what he or she saw or heard before hypnosis on the theory the procedure has contaminated their memories.

Thus, two different court systems are operating under vastly different sets of rules on the admission of hypnotically induced testimony.

Other states allow pre- and post-hypnotic testimony, but under strict rules of cross examination. They also allow both the prosecution and defense to present expert witnesses on the contaminatory effects of hypnosis on memory.

"There are a lot of misconceptions about hypnosis," said Detective Patrick Brady, a 28-year veteran of the Boston Police Department and its only Investigative Hypnosis unit member.

"First of all, it is not mysterious, it is not sleep," he said calmly as he leaned back in his chair.

In his office — with its light blue walls, darker blue wall-to-wall carpet, soft lights and music, all designed to put witnesses and victims at ease — Brady uses hypnosis only on witnesses and victims and only when they agree.

He is purposely isolated in a second-floor office of the Hyde Park police station so anything his fellow officers say or do in within earshot of him will not affect how he conducts his hypnotic investigation.

A simple remark by a fellow cop, even if unintentional, may be used to discredit information later obtained from the witness under hypnosis.

"We only use hypnosis when the investigation has come to a dead end," Brady said. He said hypnosis enhances memory by allowing the witness to concentrate on one idea.

"Hypnosis is simply an investigative tool — nothing more, nothing less," he said.

Brady said the sessions are videotaped and audiorecorded before, during and after the procedure so any question of the use of body language or tone of voice by the hypnotist to induce certain answers can be discerned.

Those under hypnosis, he said, are asked to close their eyes and try to project their memory of the event on an imaginary television screen.

He described a case in which a woman, brutally raped over a three-hour period, was hypnotized to break free of the traumatized emotions of the attack.

Brady recounted how this woman, kidnapped and sexually assaulted after her car became stuck in snow, was able while hypnotized to fill in the details describing her attacker.

Her description was so accurate, Brady recalled, that she helped experts make a remarkably accurate drawing of the rapist who was later convicted and jailed for the attack.

Peter Arenella, a professor of law at Boston University, is skeptical about hypnotism as a law enforcement tool but said he thinks the Kater ruling was "a good one."

Research, Arenella said, has shown that eyewitness accounts "can in fact be very unreliable" and even more so when testimony is contaminated by hypnosis.

"Overwhelming evidence" shows that hypnotized witnesses often "confabulate" — or exaggerate and fantasize — their recall of events," he said.

William J. Burke

Was Deputy Chief of the Newton Police

William J. Burke

NEWTON — William J. Burke, retired deputy chief of the Newton Police Department, died on Sunday, Oct. 21 following a lengthy illness.

William Burke served for 35 years with the Newton Police from patrolman through the ranks to deputy chief, retiring in Oct. of 1972.

Born in County Galway, Ireland, he came as a child with his family to Watertown where he was raised and educated.

As a young man he married Grace McMullen and moved to Newton.

He was employed as security chief at Lasell College when he took the police examination. He was successful in finishing first among hundreds in the competitive entrance exam for the police department. On each succeeding examination for promotion, Burke either topped other applicants, or was second at the time when he competed.

He was appointed to the Newton Police Department by Chief Michael T. Hughes. Bill Burke's first assignment was in Nonantum during the war years when Raytheon worked around the clock and thousands of transients passed through the area. Even in his early years on the department he earned respect from both transients and residents for his 'no nonsense' approach to law enforcement.

In 1947, he was promoted to sergeant by Chief Nicholas Veduccio. Following his promotion, he was assigned to the Vice Squad and successfully reduced illegal gambling 'bookies' by vigorous prosecution. Later, he became a patrol sergeant and then was promoted to lieutenant by Chief Philip Purcell and assigned to re-activate the Auxiliary Police Department.

Burke recruited over 200 business and professional men and they were considered among the best trained and most knowledgable auxiliaries in Massachusetts due to Burke's desire to ensure that every man knew the law and its application. It was at this time that he formed a study group with Chief William Charlton of Brookline, Superintendent William Hogan of the Boston Police Academy, and Retired Superintendents William Taylor and John Krickler, also of Boston, to promote greater understanding of police law and constitutional guarantees.

At the time the group was formed, all were sergeants or lieutenants, and all rose to take command positions as did many others who formed the study group.

The efforts of the group led to the present studies of law enforcement and criminal justice in local universities and colleges.

After service with the Auxiliary Police, he became a platoon commander and was then promoted to captain and commander of the detective bureau where he was responsible for all investigations and prosecutions in both district and superior courts. Subsequently, he was appointed to Deputy Chief by Chief William F. Quinn and became inspector of divisions and acting chief whenever the chief was away.

Newton Police Chief William F. Quinn stated that Bill Burke retired September, 1, 1972 after an outstanding career.

At the time of his retirement Deputy Burke said "Looking back, I feel the years have been rewarding and well spent and filled with just about every experience a police officer could have, from settling family problems, to assisting at births, arranging for safety of children and of course, apprehending criminals and even murder investigations and arrests... For a police officer, there isn't much more I could have experienced."

Chief William F. Quinn commented, "Chief Bill Burke's career was one for all young officers to study. Knowledge of the law and the people it serves is the ladder of success. He was a brilliant legal student and a fine police officer."

William Burke is survived by his wife, Grace (McMullen) Burke; three sons, William J. Burke of Acton, John N. Burke of Tuscon, Az. and James R. Burke of Newton; two daughters, Virginia G. Burke of Newton and Patricia M. Shea of Natick; three brothers, Edward Burke of Watertown, Walter Burke of New Hampshire and John Burke of Framingham; and one sister, Mary Waitt of Watertown. He is also survived by 14 grandchildren.

Funeral services are scheduled to be held from the Martin E. Conroy & Son Funeral Home, 439 Washington St., Newton, on Thursday at 9 a.m. followed by a funeral mass at Our Lady Help of Christians Church in Newton at 10 a.m. In lieu of flowers, donations may be made in William's name to the Alzheimer's Disease Assn., 75 E. Newton St., Boston 02118. Interment will be at Newton Cemetery.

Dir. of Italian Home retires

JAMAICA PLAIN — Anthony S. J. Tomasello of Westwood, executive director of the Italian Home for Children and president of the Mt. Washington Cooperative Bank, is retiring.

Over 200 guests attended a recent testimonial held in his honor at the Sheraton Boston Hotel.

"Anthony has been a dedicated and admirable contributor to our community both as a friend and a colleague. His support will never be forgotten, and his lasting impression will always be with us," said Carmen Barletta of Westwood, current president of the Italian Home for Children.

"Mr. T," as he was known by at The Home, graduated from Harvard University in 1937 and Northeastern University Law School in 1941. He joined the charity in 1957 to maintain the quality service that The Home lends to needy children. He was appointed executive director in 1978 after having served as assistant treasurer, treasurer, and president.

Tomasello initiated several new programs for The Home, including the reorganization of the purpose from a shelter for the homeless to a residential treatment center for abused and neglected children.

Tomasello will relinquish his duties at the close of October and venture south to reside on a golf resort in Florida.

Artist get Saudi commission

NEWTON — Local artist John Tarzian has been commissioned by a Saudi Arabian sheik to paint two murals, 30' x 12' each. He will complete the project by traveling to Saudi Arabia to install the two murals and paint the ceiling of the foyer in the sheik's family home.

The art-work of Tarzian, a Boston-area resident for 30 years, appears throughout the United States, Canada and Mexico, as well as in Switzerland and the Emirates of Arabia.

When faced with the problem of finding suitable work space in which to begin his project, Tarzian turned to the art deparment of Lasell Junior College in Newton. The college's Carter Hall, built in 1884 with cathedral ceilings, provides Tarzian with ample work space and accommodates the height of his murals.

BC football fans ignore ordinance

She said that is not the responsibilty of area residents.

"People in the neighborhood have had beer bottles thrown into their cars," she said.

That combined with fans having grilling burgers on hibachis on peoples lawns and urinating in their yards "tends to break the faith we have," Friedman said.

But Barton said students are aware and obeying the city's tailgating ban. The problem, he said, is with adults who come into the city and are not aware of the ordinance.

And he attributes recent problems to the sudden success of the football team.

"I think there's a recognition in the Commonwealth that this is a temporary problem," he said. "I think that our relations with the community are improving."

On Oct. 13 there were 10 cars towed, 66 parking tickets issued, 15 warnings given for open alcohol containers and eight warnings for tailgating, Barton said.

In response to community concerns Barton said 50 Newton Police officers will work the Oct. 27 game against Rutgers, a number "which is unprecedented in the history of Boston College."

Usually, 36 Newton officers, 41 Boston College officers, six Boston police and eight MDC police work home games, he said.

There will also be an increase in the number of MDC and Boston police at the Rutgers game, Barton said.

Barton said one way the college has responded to area concerns was by holding the first meeting of the Boston College Newton Advisory Board with residents to discuss tailgating and parking concerns.

"We're making every attempt to respond on an issue by issue basis," he said.

Friedman said the problem is likely to worsen if plans are not made to accomodate the influx of cars for athletic events.

"To imagine a football stadium bigger than Fenway Park and the kinds of people who come to the games ... (the college) tries to make plans for more development and there's no place to park.

"I think people are happy for for Boston College's success, especially their athletics," Friedman said. But, she added, that the school must keep the neighborhood in mind where fans and traffic are concerned.

Friedman said a police officer at the Temple game told her "many more" police would be needed to adequately enforce the tailgating and public drinking ordinances.

"I saw hundreds of incidences of open drinking," she said.

But in response to that charge Barton replied, "I don't have any evidence that there were hundreds of violations," adding that the number of violations given out were "surprisingly low."

Barton said a comprehensive plan to alleviate tailgating, drinking and illegal parking will be unveiled by the college.

In the future Boston College plans to build a 7,500 seat sports complex for basketball, hockey and other events. The stadium will be built in the vicinity of McHugh Forum and Roberts Center, which accommodate about 4,000 fans each. Barton said the arena will be accompanied by an addition to the campus parking garage.

Barton said the current facilities are "inadequate for serving the needs of this community."

Missing man found dead

By Eric Fehrnstrom, Staff Writer

NEWTON — On April 6, 1983, Gerald Gallant left his Newton home and never returned. At 21 years old, Gallant, the youngest of six children, was described as a well-adjusted, responsible man who never missed work or got into trouble.

"He disappeared and we had nothin' to go on," said Newton Det. Capt. Walter Drew. "He was a hardworking kid. Highly regarded. This whole case — it was like there were feathers hanging over it. We couldn't grab onto anything."

Two weeks ago, his body was located in an unmarked Las Vegas grave — bringing an end to the 18-month search that saw police tap all available resources in a nationwide hunt involving psychics, cash rewards and a handful of nowhere leads.

Gallant, who disappeared without a trace, has been positively identifed as the man who fell to his death from the roof of the Tropicana Hotel in Las Vegas, Nev., on April 12, 1983, Drew said. He was reported missing six days earlier.

"As far as the family is concerned and as far as we are concerned, Gallant has been located," Drew said.

At the time, his death was ruled a suicide, according to Las Vegas Det. Lt. John Conner of the homicide bureau. He was found with no identification and nothing in or around the hotel showed he was a guest there, Conner said.

The body has not been moved pending disinterment pro-

Hit and run driver given a year in jail

By Eric Fehrnstrom
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A Newton District Court judge has sent a local college student to jail for the August hit-and-run accident that left a 21-year-old woman hospitalized for three weeks with severe injuries.

"I always have to think of the victims," said Judge Monte G. Basbas, moments before sentencing Edgard R. Chavero, 23, of Newton, to concurrent two-year terms in a House of Correction for leaving the scene of an accident after personal injury and operating to endanger.

Basbas ordered Chavero to serve one year of the sentence and suspended the balance for a period of three years.

For driving under the influence of alcohol, Chavero received a suspended, two-year House of Correction sentence and was ordered to pay all expenses incurred by his victim, Barbara Burtt, a Cambridge nurses' aide who used to reside in Newton.

Total expenses are reportedly in excess of $30,000.

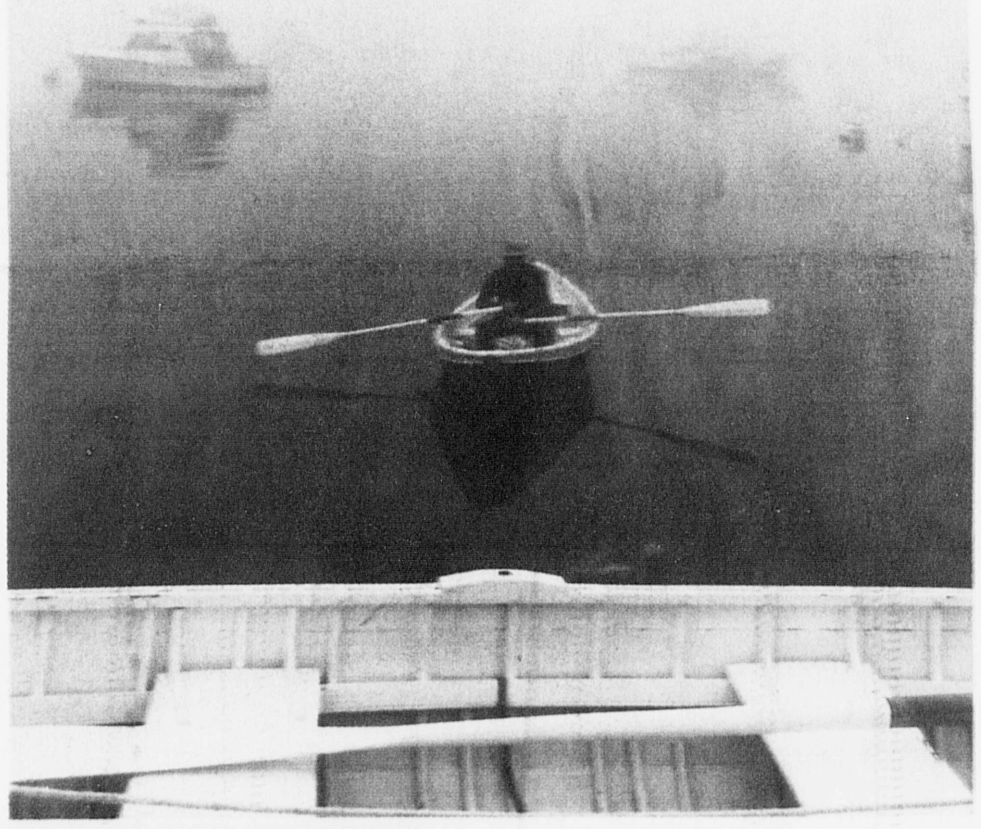

It was his second conviction on a drunk driving offense in less than a year. He was also fined $50 for operating an uninspected motor vehicle. A fifth charge alleging operating with a revoked license was dismissed prior to yesterday's trial.

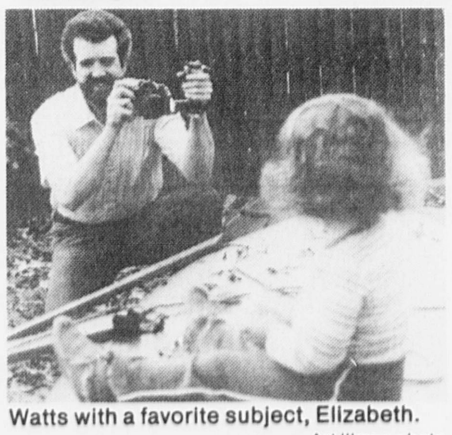

The defendant is a Venezualan native who holds dual citizenship in the United States while attending Wentworth Institute in Boston on a full government scholarship. He stood emotionless as the sentence was read.

His Boston attorney, Robert Murray, filed an appeal for a jury

SATs dip this year

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

NEWTONVILLE — While Newton's high school seniors continued to score above the national average on the Scholastic Aptitude Tests (SATs), test results from last year were lower than those achieved the year before.

Newton South High School students also scored higher than their Newton North counterparts for the second consecutive year.

According to a report recently completed by Asst. Supt. for Operations and Planning Vincent J. Silluzio, Newton students taking the SATs averaged a verbal score of 447 and a mathematics score of 508. These totals exceed both the national averages of 426/verbal and 471/math, and the statewide averages of 429/verbal and 467/math.

Scores in Newton have remained consistently higher than the national averages since 1972, when comparable senior class data first became available. This year, for the first time in 21 years, national scores took an upward jump of four points, making the Newton decline even more noticable.

But this year's graduating class lessened the gap between Newton's scores and the national average, scoring 22 combined points less than the class of 1983

Weekend celebration

The city thanks the Jackson family

By Kevin C. Kennedy, News Editor

NEWTON CORNER — The Jackson Homestead, "one family's gift to the architectural landscape and the cultural life of our city," was the scene of a three-day celebration, this past weekend, that marked the 175th birthday of the elegant Federal home on Washington Street.

The old house, which was given to the city 35 years ago, fairly glowed with human warmth Friday night as descendants of old Edward Jackson were given a champagne reception by friends of the homestead. Sunday afternoon saw the house open to the public tours, refreshments, live chamber music and an anniversary exhibit entitled, "A Celebration of the Jacksons and Their House."

The history of one of the city's more famous families is sketched, throughout the homestead, in minute details. From pieces of furniture, scraps of paper, old photos, handicrafts and from the house itself, visitors deduce a composite portrait of 300 years of family history.

Jackson family descendants like Michael Paine overflowed with family details at the reception. He spoke with obvious pride of the likes of Michael Jackson, who took his five children along with him when he left home to fight in the Revolutionary War. While later Jacksons were known to pay substitutes to perform military service for them, Michael started out at the Battle of Bunker Hill, suffered through the agonies of a winter encampment at Valley Forge and was mustered out at Yorktown.

ceedings, said a spokeswoman for the Las Vegas Clerk-County Coroner's office.

Gallant, the son of Lawrence and Eleanor Gallant of 37 Fordham Rd., left his home at about 8:30 p.m. on April 6, telling his mother earlier that night he was going out for awhile and would be home soon. No one actually saw him leave.

Gallant's 1980 Cadillac Eldorado and van were left parked in the driveway. His cash savings — kept in two bank accounts here and in New Hampshire, where he worked during the summer — remained untouched, police said.

"We don't have any answers to anything," said Gallant's mother, Eleanor. "Nothing is settled. We don't know how he got out there or why."

In the weeks following his disappearance, local police checked all passenger lists on outgoing flights from Logan International Airport and found nothing, Drew said. Area cab companies and car rental agencies reported that no one fitting his description sought their services, he added.

An unidentifed vehicle was reportedly seen in the area of his home prior to the disappearance. Gallant allegedly "entered" that vehicle, according to a report published by a national missing persons bureau.

Police, however, dispute that information as rumor and hearsay.

"No one saw him get into any vehicle," said Newton Det. Francis DeVito, who kept a two-inch thick file on the case and travelled as far as Florida and Tennessee to check out unidentifed bodies pulled from either roadside ditches or murky waters.

"We had about five or six queries from other states about dead bodies that were discovered with no ID," DeVito said. "We even had one body taken out of the Merrimack River in Lowell. It turned out to be a black male."

Unsolicited help from psychics — the type most cases of this kind attract — was occasionally made available to police and family members. "We got all sorts of calls, from all across the country, and we checked everyone of them out," DeVito said. "They're not unusual and we're skeptical of them, but we followed every one up."

In one instance, a family member consulted a Randolph psychic one month after the unexplained disappearance. He reportedly divined that Gallant was "still in Massachusetts."

The break in the case came earlier this month, when the Las Vegas Police Department cross-referenced their unidentified suicide victims with the National Computer Information Center's (NCIC) list of missing persons, police said.

When a preliminary match was made, Las Vegas authorities contacted Newton Police Chief William Quinn and reported their findings. Two officers were assigned and sent to Nevada.

Lt. John Likely and Sgt. John Roman made what police believe is a positive match, comparing notes with those held by Las Vegas police.

The match was made using photographs, dental records and blood tests, police said.

Gallant's mother and father confirmed last weekend the body was that of their son, Drew said, adding they are now "awaiting clearance" to exhume the body and bring it back to Newton.

Gallant, who police described as a meticulous man who did not drink, gamble or use drugs, had "everything going for him," DeVito said.

"He was obsessed with being a millionaire. He would have been a great success," he added.

New teacher proposal: $20,000 average salary

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

NEWTON — If the teacher's contract recently negotiated by School Committee and Newton Teachers Association (NTA) representatives is ratified, the bulk of Garden City teachers will be earning $20,000 or more during the next two years.

Although the salary scale for the Garden City educators starts at only $15,618 for a teacher holding a bachelor's degree, the bulk of the city's teachers are now at higher-paying levels of the scale, according to Assistant Superintendent of Personnel Thomas O'Conor.

On a salary scale which ranges from step 1 to step 13, 538 of the 725 teachers are now working at step 13, according to O'Conor. Each step corresponds to years of experience, with the amount an educator makes at each step determined by the degree he holds.

The minimum salary for an educator with a bachelor's degree at step 13, according to last year's contract, is $26,266. If the five and six percent increases went into effect, this salary would increase to $27,579 in the first year and $29,234 in the second.

The minimum salary for a teacher holding a bachelor's degree at step seven, according to last year's contract, is $19,795. If the proposed 5 and 6 percent wage increase goes through, an educator at this step will earn over $20,500 the first year and $22,000 the next.

The total cost of the proposed wage increases for the pending contract is a little under $1 million for this year and approximately $1,350,000 in the second year of the contract, according to O'Conor. The total school budget this year is a little under $42 million, or approximately half of the total City budget.

NTA president Tony Croce has recently indicated that Garden City teachers maintain a level of excellence which the proposed wage increases do not adequately compensate. He also expressed concern with the fact that the majority of funds from the city's over $2 million in free cash were allocated for capital repairs and not education. Not expecting a rejection to bring any better offers, however, the NTA president will recommend that teachers accept the document.

Mayor Theodore Mann, on the other hand, not only insists the city's surplus cannot be used for education, but also indicates there is not sufficient money for the proposals now on the table.

"When free cash is available in the city, it must be used for pressing needs, to repair the worst sidewalks and roads in the city," Mann said. "This is once a year money. What do you do, not fix them?"

The mayor also noted that, "If the contract applied to everyone in the city, millions and millions of dollars would be involved."

Comm Ave. repair gets rough reaction

By Edward Cafasso, Staff Writer

NEWTON — Construction has begun to repave the bumpy Auburndale section of Commonwealth Avenue, but, if comments made by the neighborhood's most outspoken alderman are any indication, the effort will be greeted with less than smooth reaction from many of the area's businessmen and residents.

Ward 4 Alderman-at-Large Richard J. McGrath has called repaving the city's most famous street "illogical" and "wasteful," and said Public Works Commissioner James L. Hickey acted "improperly" by going ahead with the effort without consulting Auburndale citizens.

"I'm opposed to wasting $500,000 on a street that's going to be reconstructed in just a couple of years. Politically, it's very improper to do it without consulting the neighborhood on the implications of it. They shouldn't have veto power over it, but they should have major input," McGrath said.

The money could have been used for similar efforts on many other city roadways, he added.

Attempts to reach members of the Aurburndale Community Association were unsuccessful.

Hickey had said earlier this month that the $439,000 project to resurface the 84-year-old, five-and-half-mile roadway was going to start in Auburndale by mid-October, but the stretch from Grant Avenue to the Boston line near Boston College was actually the first to be done.

In announcing the resurfacing project, Hickey said it was necessary because the condition of the street posed serious legal liabilities for the city should a motorist be hurt in accident linked to the deteriorating surface.

The focal point of the dispute is a planned, $5 million Urban Systems Project (USP) destined to reconstruct the entire length of Commonwealth Avenue. Hickey maintains the USP won't get off the ground until 1988 and won't reach Auburndale until four years later, but McGrath is dubious of that evaluation.

After a heated exchange with Hickey several weeks ago during an aldermanic Public Facilities Committee meeting called to examine the effort, a beet-faced McGrath walked out of the session, making it clear he did not like the commissioner's "unilateral" decision to repave the street.

"I find it very hard to deal with a man who has the inability to accept the facts as they exist and incorporate them into his decisions," he said, adding that aldermen have already approved the conceptual phase of the USP and even the former public works commissioner expected to see actual engineering plans for the project early next year.

"(Hickey) probably didn't consider it a problem. He didn't do a proper job of research. He got the $500,00 from the state and figured this would be a good way to spend it without any thought. It'll look good for the (Boston) Marathon," McGrath said, calling Hickey an "on-the-job schoolee" who is "hardly an experienced voice on public works procedures."

One faction with the Auburndale neighborhood is happy with the effort because they believe the resurfacing will put "the final coffin nail" into the USP, which they now see as "illogical" because the new pavement would have to be torn up, he said.

Another section of the neighborhood is unhappy with the resurfacing effort because they believe it signals waning city interest toward badly-needed traffic improvements, especially at the bridge leading over the Massachusetts Turnpike and at Lyons Playground, according to McGrath.

He added that Auburndale citizens have given the city their recommendations for such improvements, but the city has been reluctant to fund the project and, instead, has resorted to "knee-jerk, temporary attempts to address the traffic problems."

McGrath also slammed Hickey's contention that the roadway's new surface will only last three years.

"I'd like to see him say that to the state officials who gave the city the money to do the work," he said.

service and a very strong commitment to living a life bound by strict, Christian principles are other elements of the family history to which today's Jackson descendants point with obvious pride.

According to Paine, the Homestead's history as a stop on "the underground railway" that delivered escaped slaves to freedom was indicative of the family's commitment to the principles of transcendentalism. For the Jacksons of the mid-1800's, "God and freedom were the same thing," according to Paine, and slavery was a purely theological issue.

Though the family has dispersed over the centuries, there seems to be a common bond that ties them to the Homestead. "Our family always kept our roots in Newton," Paine commented.

Victoria Patterson, a teacher at the Horace Mann school, knows of the persistence of any connection with the Jackson family. A relative of hers, 200 years ago, married into the Jackson family and immediately moved out of town to Maine. Little effort was made to keep the family ties up over the years, she said, but more than 20 years ago she found herself living in Newton with a brand new baby boy and the force of the family filtered through the time and distance. She named her son "Jackson."

The weekend anniversary celebration was choreographed, right down to the flowers, by the homestead's director, Duscha S. Scott. A history of the family and the homestead, written by Thelma Fleishman, was published just in time for the event.

Alternative to trick-or-treat

By Robert K. Newman, Correspondent

WEST NEWTON — Celtic tradition in medieval times called for witches, ghosts, goblins, and demons to gather on the eve of All Saints' day, All Hallows, to usher out the summer and welcome in the barren winter.

Saturday, as gray skies and brisk winds filled the outdoors, children masquerading as these sinister creatures paraded into the West Newton Cinema performing the ritual their medieval ancestors once had.

For approximately 150 children and parents, the popular autumn festival arrived early as the Newton Jaycees and the West Newton Merchants Association co-sponsored their second annual "Alternate to Trick or Treat."

"We call it an alternative as it gives families a controlled way to dress up in costumes and eat candy," said Sharon Yarkoni, president of the Newton Jaycees.

Although the afternoon gave children the opportunity to view either traditional favorite "The Black Stallion" or current dance classic "Footloose", youngsters remained intrigued by the popcorn and candy that makes Halloween and the movies a dynamic combination.

To enhance participation in the day, the West Newton Merchants Association published a flyer of coupons and shopping specials for families attending. Judi Caliva, president of the association and owner of Flowers on the Square pointed to the outstanding participation of the local merchants that helped make this day possible.

Four-year-old Scott McGrane of Newton who played the devil aside his sister Meridith, an angel, summarized his feelings of this ancient Anglo Saxon festival.

"Trick or treat, trick or treat, getting something good to eat," McGrane chanted.

Correction

Due to a reporting error, quotes from Aldermen Verne Vance and Robert Tennant were mistakenly attributed to each other in "14 aldermen endorse lone ballot question," on page 1 of the Oct. 24 Newton Graphic. It was Alderman Tennant who is adamantly opposed to the ballot referendum, and Alderman Vance who chose not to endorse the question on the basis of insufficient information. We regret any confusion this error may have caused.

We endorse ....

For president, the Reagan ticket

Ronald W. Reagan and George H. W. Bush for President and Vice President.

Two compelling questions rise above all the campaign hoopla as the voters take over Nov. 6. Is the country better off than it was four years ago? And which team is best suited to deal with the future's complex and perilous problem?

Transcript Newspapers is convinced the answers to both weigh heavily in favor of Reagan-Bush stewardship. In terms of economic well-being, with unemployment and interest rates sharply reduced, we are much better off. Abuses in give-away programs have been reduced, as well, and much of the responsibility for human services shifted to the states. America wanted excesses of the Great Society dealt with. With Reagan we got it.

In foreign policy, the President has held to a steady course. Although debt management remains the most vital domestic problem, we believe he can well implement the Grace Commission recommendations. This he has pledged to do. Nothing in the Mondale-Ferraro campaign, although useful as a national forum, indicated those candidates could do the job better than the incumbents.

Shamie for U.S. Senator

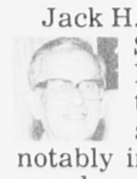

Raymond Shamie for U.S. Senate. The conservative Walpole Republican, has willingly put his money and energies where his convictions are. He has been engaged in a classical political confrontation. Shamie stands for greater self initiative, a balanced budget, no new taxes for debt reduction, trade grants rather than handouts to foreign countries and business incentives to create more jobs.

Shamie's liberal opponent, John Kerry is, at 40-years-old, already too much the professional politician who quickly uses one office as a stepping stone to another. The PAC money flip flop of the past weekend is indicative of the man whose mind is more made up by political reaction than personal conviction.

Frank, innovative

Barney Frank for U.S. Representative, Fourth District. Frank has lived up to all expectations as an innovator and clear thinker.

Backman, takes on the difficult

Jack H. Backman for the Massachusetts Senate, Second Middlesex-Norfolk District. His willingness to tackle the most difficult of state government problems, notably in prison reform, makes him unpopular with authorities, but is one of his many valuable General Court roles.

Larkin, McLaughlin, established

Thomas Larkin and Michael McLaughlin for County Commissioners. Firmly established in their positions, both nevertheless have been progressive in advancing reforms of the county government process.

Reformers aim at Senate

By Jerry Berger

Leaders of a citizens effort to force legislative rules reform are confident at least some of the initiatives they are pushing will be adopted by the House, but the prospects for change in the Senate are somewhat bleaker.

That's the assessement of Eric Anderson of Citizens for Participation in Political Action and a principal in the Coalition for Legislative Reform. His belief is based on the responses of more than 100 legislative candidates to a rules reform questionnaire.

"We've already won" six reform questions, Anderson believes from a review of responses from House incumbents and challengers who answered the 10-question survey. "The Senate doesn't look quite as good."

The coalition is an amalgam of citizens groups as far-ranging as the liberal CPPAX and the conservative Citizens for Limited Taxation. It was the driving force behind an petition that would have given voters a voice in legislative reform.

The Supreme Judicial Court struck down the initiative petition — signed by 120,000 voters — ruling only the Legislature can change its operating rules.

But the die has been cast for change in the lower chamber, the key ingredient being the decision by Rep. George Keverian, D-Everett, to take up the reform mantle in his bid to dethrone Speaker Thomas W. McGee, D-Lynn.

The battle for the gavel gave life to an internal reform move that lead to the adoption of six key changes.

Those reforms require party caucuses to ratify committee chair and floor leader appointments — a domain once exclusively reserved for the speaker. Caucuses may also be called on the request of 25 percent of the members, a power once wielded by leaders of both parties.

It also makes it easier for members to have bills discharged from committees that once served as the burial ground for measures opposed by leadership. Copies of all bills now have to be available 24 hours before floor debate.

And the changes increase the answerability of committee members, mandating roll call votes on request and requiring them to sign committee reports.

Anderson believes the votes are there to approve at least five other reform proposals.

Among the other measures he believes will succeed in the House are rank-and-file ratification of all committee assignments, not just chairmanships and full public hearings on all bills with 48 hours notice.

Reforms that would need approval in both chambers include creation of a Legislative Administration and Budget Committee in each chamber to bring equality to office space and personnel assignments and a requirement that Constitutional Conventions consider initiative petitions before other business.

Surprises could be in store for the upper chamber, where Sen. George Bachrach, D-Watertown, has announced plans to run against President William Bulger. File photo

Several other proposals — including secret ballots for votes on party and committee posts — are likely to fail, Anderson acknowledges. And two other reforms will likely require new state laws before implementation, he admits.

The winds of change in the House will not be stilled — even if citizen reformers succeed in pushing all of their recommendations. The eventual winner of the speaker's gavel will be forced to make good on his promises or face the wrath of a reawakened chamber.

An example of that is another reform package — sponsored by 82 members — that would end the practice that automatically kills measures not acted on in the first year of the two-year session.

That package also calls for expanded oversight duties for all committees and elimination of the conflict between committee meetings and full House sessions.

The outlook in the Senate is a less cheery subject for the coalition.

"We have made gains in the Senate," Anderson says, although survey results indicate none of the 10 questions are likely to pass.

But surprises could be in store for the upper chamber, where Sen. George Bachrach, D-Watertown, has announced plans to run against President William Bulger. Bachrach had been in the forefront of the petition drive.

Statehouse observers do not believe he has a significant chance of winning the gavel. But a potential wild card remains the departure of three members of Bulger's leadership team — including one who lost to a reform candidate.

Ronnie and Wally are at it again

By Mark White

(Loud yelling heard in background.)

Wally! Ronnie! Stop fighting!!!

"He started it. He said that I was too old and that I looked like warmed over toast."

I didn't say that. I said that he was too old and looked like stale toast.

"See, Wally started it. He keeps making fun out of me."

Oh yeah. What about your calling me a pansy, a sissy and a wimp. Ya did everything but call me a girl.

"Well, all the other kids say you're a wimp and you've got the dumbest smile that we've ever seen."

It's not my fault. I got it from my Norweigan ancestry.

You're responsible for everything that's gone wrong in this nieghborhood. Ever since we made you the leader we've had nothing but problems.

"Like what?"

Like the kids across the street. What are we going to do about them?

"We just got a whole bunch of new slingshots."

Well, they just got a bunch of rocks.

> 'You keep borrowing from your dad. How are we going to pay it back?'
> Wally

"Oh yeah. Well I told my brother to go out and buy a whole load of slingshots.

Where did you get the money?

"I borrowed it from my dad."

You keep borrowing from your dad. How are we going to pay it back?

"Look, you. If it was up to you we'd have given up our territory a long time ago."

Oh yeah. Well what about the fact that you're so old. Don't you think a 12 years old is too old to be leading our gang?

"Oh yeah? Let's race to the mailbox and see who's too old."

And what about your friend George. He's such a snob.

"Oh yeah. Well at least I don't hang around with girls like you do with your friend Geraldine."

Hey, I bet that she can beat you and George up at the same time. Besides, you and your buddies make all the rules and my friends keep getting the short end of the stick.

"Well, don't worry about it. Four of them are moving into the fifth grade and won't be part of the gang anymore."

But you'll just get four more of your obnoxious friends to take their place. And they'll make worse rules.

"So, what are you gonna do about it, huh?"

I want to bring in four of my friends. Besides, you're getting to be too big for your britches. I want to be the leader now.

"So Wally wants to be the leader. Are you gonna fight me for it."

No, I don't want to fight like you do. I'm gonna talk to the other kids in the neighborhood and get them to kick ya out.

"Oh yeah. Try it. All the kids like me and think you're a jerk."

Oh yeah?

"Yeah!"

(Loud yelling heard in the background.)

Ronnie! Wally! Stop fighting. Start acting your age!!

(How about it Ronnie and Wally?)

Commissioners due credit for county reforms

As chairman of the Middlesex County Commissioners, I would like to add my congratulations to those offered by the Newton Graphic to Mayor Theodore Mann and the entire Middlesex County Advisory Board. There is no question that, since the inception of that board, there have been many healthy changes in the government of Middlesex County.

However, regarding the editorial which appeared in the Newton Graphic on Oct. 17, there are a few items for which credit claimed by the advisory board might be more evenly distributed to include actions by the county commissioners.

Looking carefully at the county budget over the past three years gives a slightly different picture than that portrayed by Mayor Mann's press release, which prompted the editorial. First of all, in that period of time, the county budget as passed by the advisory board has actually increased by eight percent. The assessment, which is the level of taxation on the cities and towns, may well have decreased by 20 percent, but that is primarily due to increased revenues, greater efficiency and better revenue forecasting - all of which are functions of the County Commissioners' office.

In addition, some of the cuts approved by the advisory board have affected the delivery of services, such as in the Registry of Deeds. there, a study committee of county personnel, advisiory board members and registry users has recently recommended increased expenditures to solve manpower and equipment shortages.

The improved personnel classifications in the county were established as the direct result of a joint mmanagement/union classification study which was implemented by the commissioners through the collective bargaining process. The new staffing of the commissioner's office with professional administrators is the product of my reorganization plan, which was accepted by my fellow conuty commissioners over the objection of the advisory board's Budget Committee.

The vitally important physical inventory and Five Year Capital Outlay Plan was prepared by the commissioners at the request of the advisory board, but, when it came time to implement that plan, the advisory board turned it down over the recommendations of its own Capital Facilities Subcommittee and its own Budget Committee.

Reuse policies for underutilized county properties were developed exclusively by the commissioners, and have been successfully implemented in the sale of the former training school in Chelmsford, and the anticipated sale of the vacant Third District Courthouse in Cambridge. The latter property will be sold to the state for $700,000 — a sum double that originally offered by the state — due to the persistent negotiations of the county commissioners.

The dismissal of the county hospital's top fiscal managers and their replacement with strong administrators was solely an act of the hospital trustees, and the renegotiation of the county health insurance in order to save taxpayers mnoney was planned and executed without advisory board input.

Locally, I can understand the frustration of Newton's Mayor Mann in paying almost ten percent of the county's tax assessment, and I can see the need for changing the formula that the state's Department of Revenue uses to determine the rate for each city and town. I would support legislation to cure this problem, and I hope Mayor Mann would consider ending his chronic oversimplification that the cure to solving the problems of county government is its abolition.

As chairman of the Middlesex County Board of Commissioners, I too am proud of the changes in Middlesex County government, and, though we sometimes disagree, I think that the advisory board has exerted a profound and positive influence on the affairs of the county. Nevertheless, a sense of fairness and accuracy dictates that the credit for those successes as well as the blame for our errors be properly assigned to both the executive and legislative bodies.

Vance objects to quotation

Dear Sir:

It was with great dismay that I read in your issue of Oct. 24 a series of quotations attributed to me concerning the Central American Referendum. Those quotations so seriously misrepresented what I said to your reporter that I suspect that she simply erred in attributing to me what some other alderman said.

To set the record straight, what I in fact said was that I neither endorsed the referendum nor opposed it because I felt insufficiently knowlegeable about all the facts pertinent to a rather wide ranging and complex question to take a public stance on it. As a matter of general philosophy, I am skeptical about the wisdom or usefulness of pronouncing on complex foreign-policy issues through referendum votes by citizens most of whom are not in a position to be adequately informed of the facts pertaining to such matters.

Finally, I most emphatically did not say that "I don't want to be classed in that (liberal) category." I believe that my positions on public issues would generally be classified as moderate to liberal, and most political candidates whom I have supported, including Governor Dukakis, Congressman Frank and Representatives Cohen and Schur, are liberals with whom I have been proud to be associated.

Don't pay school committee

Open letter to Ald. Vance:

This letter is in answer to your recently published request for comment concerning the two items listed below.

Limitation In Office For School Committee Members:

Your attention is called to the "Minority Statement" I filed with the final report of the Newton Charter Commission. Section 4 of that statement indicates " A school committee member is limited to four consecutive terms without limitations placed on other elected officials. This is discriminatory."

I still support the above statement since I believe that this rule should apply to all elected officals or to none of them. Currently however, I would support a limitation of 8 conseccutive years in office for all elected City or State officals. I do not believe that paid professional politicians serve the ppeople as well as volunteers can.

Pay For the School Committee:

As a former 12 year member of the Newton School Committee, I am totally opposed to any kind of salary for the School Committee.

Since the members of the current School Committee knowingly ran for this unpaid office., it is unconscionable of them to now desire pay for serving the City. They can do us all a favor by not running for re-election.

It is interesting to note that the 1970 Newton Charter Commission recommended the retention of the 24 member Board of Alderman only because testimony given by then members of that board suggested that if its size were reduced to 16, the burden of the extra work placed on eight less members would result in a demand for salaries. How hollow were their words when a few years later the board members voted themselves a salary which also includes health insurance and pension rights. Every few years since that time, the board discusses and then increases its own pay. We don't need the same thing happening with the School Committee.

Limit school comm. terms

Open Letter to Ald. Vance:

I would like to see the current limit of four consecutive two-year terms for school committee members to remain intact. After eight years some members could reach burn-out status and would not function at 100 percent energy level. As opposed to the many varied aldermanic committees which always face new and multi-faceted challenges, many educational decisions must be redundant; i.e., how many with all their ramifications can one endure?

I feel very strongly that monetary compensation should be restricted to neccesary out-of-pocket expenses only. There are many people volunteering their time in the City of Newton because they want to make a contribution to a better way of life for its citizens. That, in itself, should be gratifying without further compensation. If the school committee members are compensated $3,000 a year for their services, that may be the main incentive for some to serve, rather than the desire to perform and do the best job they are sincerely capable of.

The aldermanic pay raise, of which I was a supporter of record, has proven to me that the level of performance has not increased. If anything, some members have become too complacent in discharging their responsibilities. In view of this, maybe your committee could instigate the method whereby there could be an annual review of attendance and overall performance. That way, these abuses will not be rewarded. If an alderman is not doing his job he should not be compensated the same as those who are.

I don't want to see the same complacency settle in on the school committee, and would hope that those who are elected to serve would consider it an honor and a privilege.

In memory of Ruth Lenson

To the Editor,

Mrs. Ruth Lenson was a Woman's Page, Food and Fashion editor of the Newton Graphic for many years during the 1970's. (I think that her page was printed in all the Transcript Papers.) Her recipes were the talk of Newton. A great many of us learned to bake bread following her directions. She even taught the eager youngsters at the Perkins School for the Blind to bake bread.

With her enthusiasm and encouragement, many, many Newtonites shared recipes in her column and we looked forward each week to her page. She never failed to bring us something new. Her holiday pages were always special.

Mrs. Lenson was also a talented artist and her paintings were treasured.

Ruth Lenson died September 9, 1984. The enclosed poem is in her memory.

RUTH

The red bird sang more sweetly
When Ruth listened.
The lilac grew more fragrant
When Ruth inhaled it,
Summer sunset more joyous
When Ruth beheld it,
The baby more peacful
When Ruth lulled him,
The challa more nourishing,
When Ruth baked it,
Friendship more loving
When Ruth was our friend.
Because she shared her very self,
Our lives were enriched.
We will miss her.

DeNucci defends Backman

To the editor,

I would like to comment on some of the innacuracies I believe were portrayed by Senator Jack Backman's Republican opponent in an interview with The Newton Graphic on October 3, 1984.

As most of your readers know, Sen. Backman is Senate Chairman and I am House Chairman of the Joint Committee on Human Services and Elderly Affairs. There are no two people in the world who do not have honest differences on some subjects. I believe our relationship has been unique in being able to work with each other on all matters, even including corrections policy, with a solid measure of success. I have worked on too many issues with Sen. Backmen, including helping abused children, the mentally ill and retarded, improved services for the elderly and all vulnerable people of the Commonwealth, to permit one issue to interfere with our mutual friendship and our joint legislative efforts.

Contrary to his opponent's charges, I have joined with Sen. Backman in a two-pronged effort at helping the elderly remain independent and out of nursing homes, which will save the state millions of dollars in Medicaid payments. Sen. Backman and I co-sponsored legislation that, on the one hand, pays home care aids better salaries so they will stay on the job. On the other hand, we have also co-sponsored legislation that provides an income tax credit for families caring for their elderly at home.

Senator Backman is also responsible for what has been hailed as one of the landmark pieces of legislation for the elderly, the repeal of mandatory retirement. Again, I was pleased, along with Frank Manning, president of the Mass. Legislative Coucil of Older Americans, to join with Sen. Backman in sponsoring this important piece of legislation.

These are just a few things that have led me to support Sen. Backman's re-election. I have learned to respect Sen. Jack Backman for his sincerity and dedication to a very difficult task, that of providing human services for those truly in need.

Comments on PLO slammed

To the editor:

Incumbent State Sen. Jack Backman stated in the Jewish Advocate (Nov. 3, 1983) that he does not equate Yassir Arafat and the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) with regimes such as apartheid South Africa and U.S. hate groups, such as the KKK.

"I consider the KKK the equivalent to the Hitlerian regime in Germany. The basic philosophy (is) the murder of my people. (That) is not the motivating factor of the PLO."

Mr. Backman apparently confuses the PLO and its military wings, which were responsible for the Entebbe massacre, Ma'alot and hundreds of other terrorist activities, with the Palestinian people.

Let no one suffer the same confusion. The PLO is, and was, a terrorist organization. Mr. Arafat's recent attempts at "moderation" do not disguise his collaborations with Libyan leader Khadafi and other Arab leaders who profess extermination of Israel.

Mr. Backman seems to feel he is immune to recrimination. That he can say any outrageous, uninformed statement, and be forgiven and forgotten.

This voter remembers.

Apartment project opposed

By Richard Nangle, Staff Writer

NEWTON — A proposal to build 25 apartments behind Beaconwood Road is drumming up strong opposition from abutters who almost unanimously oppose the development.

Residents have sent petitions with more than 100 signatures to the Board of Aldermen in hopes they will deny the required zoning variance that Capasso Realty Corp. needs to build the apartments.

"We just don't think the city's taking quite enough time," Noreen Kimball of 16 Beaconwood Rd. said.

Opposition stems from concerns about privacy (the three story apartments would allow a view into neighboring backyards), increased traffic, drainage and aesthetics.

In order to build the apartments, Capasso Realty needs a zoning change from the Private Residential District to a Residence D District.

An access road toward the end of Beaconwood Road, providing frontage for the proposed apartments, would slink behind homes along Beaconwood Road with parking directly behind businesses located on Beacon Street.

The petition asks aldermen to increase by 60 days the state-mandated time to act upon the proposal past the early December deadline. The extension would be used, Kimball said, to provide time for residents to iron out a compromise with the help of the Land Use Commmittee and Capasso Realty.

But if the extension can not be granted, the petition states, the zoning variance should be denied outright.

Alderman Rodney Barker said the zoning request was postponed by the Land Use Committee in lieu of an Engineering Department investigation into the quality of the soil.

"We want to see if some kind of development can be done there that is economic to the developer and not detrimental to the neighborhood," Barker said.

"Everyone understands that Newton definitely needs apartments," Kimball said.

But she said an agreeable compromise would push the apartments farther back from existing houses and have them built two rather than three stories high.

Kimball said neighbors are united on the issue.

"We just totally blanketed the area and no one refused to sign the petition," she said.

The signatures, she said, came every home on Beaconwood Road, Hargrave Circle, Wilson Circle and some Beaccon Street residents.

Daniel Capasso, of Capasso Realty, disagrees with neighbor concerns.

> 'This here is the best thing for the area...the way we'll do it, the way we'll maintain it.'

"Twenty-five units is nothing. There's an open area of 100 acres there, no housing, no people.

"This here is the best thing for the area. The way we'll do it, The way we'll maintain it," Capasso said.

He added that he has heard from two abutters who have applauded his development plans.

The residents would prefer Capasso to build two-family homes on the property, thus maintaining a consistent quality to the area.

But Capasso said anywhere from 25 to 30 cars patronizing Beacon Street businesses park on his vacant lot daily. He said if the apartments are built he would be able to provide adequate parking for the tenants and keep the extra 25 or so spaces. But if houses have to be built(10 to 12 duplexes), he'll need that land for development.

"You have more people with a three bedroom house than with a three-bedroom apartment," he said.

Kimball said residents are also concerned about water runoff into their basements during storms. They contend their basements already flood during rainstorms and living next to a parking lot will only increase the problem.

In addition, Capasso's property borders land covered by the Wetlands Protection Act, she said.

But Capasso said an existing underground brook between the two buildings, accessible through a culvert, would prevent any extra runoff from entering neighbor's yards.

Capasso also refuted the argument that a three story apartment would loom over existing surroundings. He said many of the nearby two story homes would be nearly as tall as the proposed apartments.

"This has all been engineered," Capasso said. "Everybody wants housing. I'm the first guy who wants to build rental housing. But my argument is if you can't build 25 units in an area of 100 acres where can you build housing?

"I'm one of the guys who's still old fashioned enough to build rental housing," Capasso said.

South SAT scores top North's and 20 points less than the class of 1982.

"This year's SAT averages, along with other data indicate that the class of 1984 as a whole was not as able as other recent classes," Silluzio's report concluded.

Grade point average declined from 2.98 at both North and South High Schools last year to 2.92 at North and 2.91 at South this year. On the other hand, PSAT scores of the class of 1985 indicate scores will again take an upward trend next year.

Silluzio says such yearly fluctuations are not uncommon.

"These data simply confirm that the ability levels of classes may vary," he said. "Nationwide, 38 percent of schools experience this kind of fluctuation."

Silluzio also noted that a larger amount of students from lower class ranks are now taking the test and going on to college, whereas the majority of SAT takers in the past were from the top 20 percent of the class.

But fluctuations between the performances of South and North school students also are appearing.

For the past two years, Newton South, which traditionally sends a higher percentage of students on to higher education, has scored higher than Newton North on both verbal and math sections of the SAT. South students averaged approximately 460/verbal and 520/math, compared to 440/verbal and 500/math at North/.

Although the trend was similar in 1983, Newton North scored higher than South in 1982 on both sections and equaled South's scores in 1979. Silluzio again emphasized such fluctuations are common and generally do not reflect the relative qualities of the schools. In general, he believes too much emphasis is being placed on the SATs.

"SATs measure ability," he said. "So, of course we should be higher than the national average. But what really is more significant are the achievement tests," or College Entrance Examination Boards (CEEBs) which specialize in one area the student chooses, such as math, English or foreign languages.

Only a small percentage of the nation's seniors taking the SAT also took the CEEB, Silluzio said. But a very high percentage of Newton SAT takers also took the CEEB, scoring higher than the national group on all tests but one.

Silluzio said CEEBs are also more likely to reflect the quality of education and instruction at individual schools than the SATs.

"I think the results of the CEEBs are pretty impressive," he said.

Neighbors complain of 'illegal rooming house'

By Richard Nangle, Staff Writer

NEWTON — When the Law Department renders an awaited decision on whether eight unrelated people living in a single-family home at 58 Winthrop St. constitutes a zoning violation, litigation is destined to follow.

The dispute has pitted irate neighbors against the landlords, Leon and Shirley Jaffe, who say they are not violating any zoning ordinances.

But the neighbors contend that large numbers of single people should not be allowed to rent in single family-zoned areas. They contend these practices will depreciate nearby property values and constitute an eyesore because of the number of cars that must be parked in said house's backyard.

The Law Department's ruling, expected to come down this week, becomes nearly academic because both sides claim that if they lose they will take the matter to court.

Building Commissioner James Cameron said Friday that he had anticipated receiving the decision by now. But to him the issue is also, in a sense, academic.

"If it is a legal activity we will take action to change conditions of the present ordinance," Cameron said.

Much depends, he said, on what the courts consider a family.

"The difference is the definition and the way the courts have responded to those definitions in the past," he said.

City Solicitor Daniel Funk Friday said his office is conducting legal research to determine what he called "consitutional implications" of the matter.

"These are issues that are going on in courts throughout the country. I know there are some tough issues here," Funk said.

"These are very subtle issues here. People's rights are involved. You've got to be very careful when you infringe on people's rights. But you can do it if it's legal, of course."

He said under city ordinances, up to seven people, related or unrelated, are allowed to live in a single family home.

Depending on whom you talk to, the Winthrop Street house would violate that law anyway.

Jaffe said eight people live in the house. Abutter Mary Malany, of 64 Perkins Road, said nine names are listed on the house's front porch.

Malany said under Newton zoning regulations, a single-family house must contain only one stove, or it ceases to be a single-family house.

She said the house, divided into a downstairs two-bedroom apartment and six separate apartments on the upper two floors which share one bathroom, has some kind of kitchen in the upper floors which she can see from her home.

But whether or not there is a stove, Malany said, problems arise. If there is a stove then zoning regulations are being violated, she said. But if each of the upper tenants must cook by some other means, for instance a hotplate, that constitutes a fire hazard, she said.

And her house is 30 feet from the apartments, she said.

"We have an illegal rooming house next door, and it's a transient neighborhood," Malany said.

She said at a recent meeting at the Unitarian Church in West Newton, neighbors discussed strategy for getting the city to deal with the issue. Residents have written letters to city officials and are looking into possible legal action if the Law Department's ruling favors the Jaffe's, she said.

Alderman Richard McGrath said the city has for some time been trying to determine what consitutes a family.

"How many unrelated people create a unit? It becomes very difficult to determine that.

"I don't want to get into an issue where single unrelated people are bad ... They need (housing) as much as everyone else needs it," McGrath said.

But he added the Jaffe's would prefer to rent to single people since singles don't need as much space as does a family, thereby creating more of a profit for the landlords.

"Jaffe recognizes that and for a profit motive takes advantage of that and draws from units from the city and converts them into single units.

"From an investment point of view, they're not interested in providing family housing," McGrath said.

But Jaffe said she and her husband Leon own seven Garden City houses and have only rented the Winthrop Street home to singles. She also said the singles are professionals fully capable of paying the rent.

McGrath also charged Jaffe with having no feeling toward the plight of families searching for decent housing.

"(Families are) a statistical number and factor that mean a cost to them. The human needs of a family for a house never entered his mind," McGrath said adding the Jaffe's are not the only realtors renting to single people in the city.

"He's kind of a visual example of what a lot of people are doing," McGrath said. "These are people who are skirting the law and taking advantage of the gray areas.

Jaffe, however, strongly objected to McGrath's inference that she and her husband discriminate against families.

"I believe Alderman McGrath discriminates against single people. A group of people can certainly rent a house as long as they are a group. Single people have rights under the law. I believe it's discriminatory not to rent to single people," Jaffe said.

She also charged the Board of Aldermen and McGrath in particular with harassing her and failing to check on others in the city who are renting to singles. She said the Building Department has a list of hundreds of potential zoning violations that have not been acted upon.

McGrath accused the Jaffe's of charging "exhorbitant rents," but Jaffe said the rents are not high and she does not operate out of a maximum profit motive.

"We have a family man renting one of our homes now, as a matter of fact — a house in Newton Centre. There is no discrimination on our part. He's going into his second year," Jaffe said.

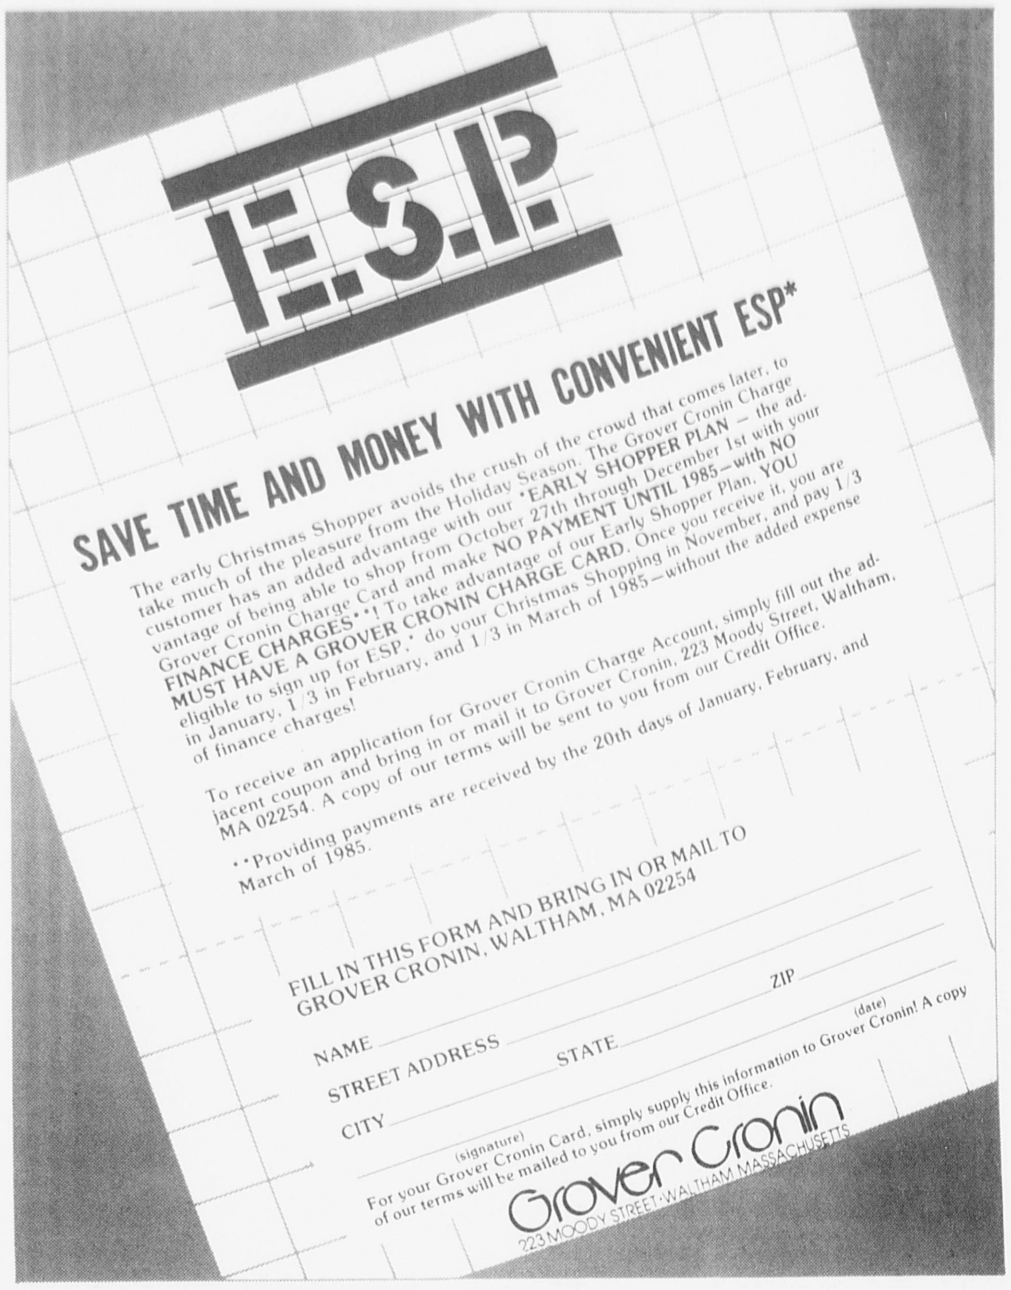

Jaffe said McGrath has an attitude that "Singles do not belong in the City of Newton. They should just be put in a truck and brought out of town."

"The City of Newton does not want single people," she said.

Teachers help produce 'Westering Game'

NEWTONVILLE — Marj Montgomery and Nancy Levin, two F.A. Day Junior High School social studies teachers, left the western suburb last July to trek to Tufts University, in Medford, where they produced "The Westering Game" in their American Studies Program, sponsored by the National Endowment for the Humanities.

The historically accurate game, which uses a wall map of the U.S., helps students who play it to understand the motives of and the hazards encountered by pioneer families who left the relative comfort of their eastern homes to struggle as they traveled by wagon train across Missouri, Kansas, Utah, Idaho, Nebraska, and Wyoming to Oregon or California in the 1840's and 1850's, seeking a good life.

Posters go public

CHESTNUT HILL — Estelle and Martin Karlin have gone public with one of the most precious parts of their private lives.

They have put their poster collection, their latest effort in more than 30 years of collecting art, on display in the lobby of the General Cinema in Chestnut Hill.

The brillant works of Chagall, Picasso, Cheret and others leap off the white walls of the lobby, many of them touting entertainments from a richer, less complicated era, the turn of the century.

Karlin, a Newton Highlands resident, said he and his wife discovered the poster as an art form six years ago. Since then, he has been combing the art capitals of the world for the works of the masters.

The posters he has collected were originally either free or very cheap, he explained, printed on cheap paper and intended to last until whatever event they promoted had taken place. Some of them now command prices of several thousand dollars, he added, with the scarcity and the condition of the poster determining its price.

Karlin commented that, several years ago, posters "provided marvelous art at easy prices." In the last few years, though, the word has gotten out and now, "The supply is simply drying up."

While he describes the late 19th and early 20th centuries as "the golden age" of poster art, Karlin points out that a form of poster has been discovered gracing the walls of the City of Pompeii.

He and his wife are showing their collection in Palm Beach, Fla., simultaneously with the exhibit in the lobby of General Cinema.

School exodus declines

NEWTON — The number of Garden City students attending private schools may be on the decline, according to a recent school-based study.

Asst. Supt. of Operations and Planning Vincent J. Silluzio has told School Committee members a possible trend of decreasing private school enrollments may be appearing in grades K-12.

Silluzio said "migration" from public to private schools can be attributed to many sources. But he added the decrease in migration is occurring mostly in the Kindergarten, sixth and seventh grades, when students most commonly enter private schools.

"The outward migration is the lowest it has been in ten years," he said.

In 1981, 189 Newton students left the system for private schools. This figure dropped to 113 in 1982, 53 in 1983 and a ten-year low of 21 this year.

"Also significant is the change in the out-migration between grades six and seven," Silluzio added. Between 1975 and 1982, he said, the out-migration for these grades, which increased from 17 to 76 students between 1975 and 1982, dropped to 26 during the last two years.

Although Silluzio will not have exact private school enrollment figures until January 1985, he noted the rate of private school enrollment last year "decreased by one-half, and the actual number of Newton students attending private school dropped to the lowest level since 1974.

"I think when we receive the actual private school enrollment figures, we'll see a continuation of this trend," Silluzio said.

waves and structures of galaxies and why the whirlpool-shaped galaxies look the way they do.

The fellowship was awarded for his work on how and why galaxies behave in groups, pairs or mergers, he said.

"My kind of astronomy deals with the motions and interplay of galaxies. Why do they have queer or bizarre looking shapes?

"The joke is that there are funny galaxies up there. They do play funny games with each other. But they do it at glacial slowness," Toomre said.

He plans to take a sabbatical to write some papers on his work during the spring 1985 semester, but now that he has the grant money he may take the fall semester off too, if necessary.

"It makes it possible to dream of things you couldn't dream of before," he said.

But he doesn't plan to abandon his job as a teacher while concentrating on his research during the next five years.

"I basically enjoy my teaching and don't want to be relieved of it for very long," Toomre said.

Toomre teaches Differential Equations, Complex Variables and Numerical Analysis at MIT, classes he said are elementary for the Cambridge school's students.

"Like an athlete, I keep fit with trig identities," he said.

Toomre has been published in Scientific American and Astrophysical Journal, which he said is the most respected astronomy journal in the world.

Married 26 years to his wife Joyce, Toomre has a daughter Anya, 20, at the University of Wisconsin, and two sons, Lars, 24 and Erik, 21 who graduated with Mechanical Engineering degrees at MIT.

Thoughts of visiting with acquaintances in Australia, Germany and England sound more appealing to him now, with his supplemental fellowship income of $44,800 a year.

He also appreciates the freedom he inherits along with the cash.

"If I wish to, they would be perfectly happy if I bought land in Tahiti," he said.

Dr. Shelley Bernstein studies oncogenes at the Whitehead Institute at MIT along with Dr. Robert Weinberg, a respected expert in the field of cancer research.

His work is based on the belief that oncogenes can be activated and produce products that when quantitatively increased, cause cancer.

"Oncogenes are pieces of DNA that are probably present in all cells in species, even in humans," he said.

"The current work I'm doing I cannot talk about," he said. "The scientific journals have not published it yet. If it gets out they won't want to publish. The New England Journal of Medicine has a long controversy with more or less being scooped by interviews by the New York Times or the like."

In addition to his research, Bernstein also practices medicine at Chidren's Hospital and the Dana Farber Cancer Institute's Jimmy Fund Clinic.

He said it gives him a pragmatic focal point for interaction between his research and practice.

"I can bring back some of the problems from the clinic to the laboratory...It's very different for me than just being in the lab all the time.

Bernstein received his PhD and did his undergraduate work at the University of Chicago. He is married and has no children.

Some of his published works have appeared in Lancet, Biochemical Genetics, Human Heredity and the New England Journal of Medicine.

The study of oncogenes is exciting, he said, but a cure through that study is not in the near future.

But like any committed scientist, he's optimistic.

"If one can show that these products are the cause of cancer - if we can alter the effect of the abnormal products of these products of the oncogenes...We may be able to prevent them from being cancer cells.

Due to the nature of the awards, Bernstein does not even know who nominated him for the fellowship. In fact, if he hadn't won he wouldn't even have known he was nominated.

"It's incredible. It came as such a surprise. It's like winning the lottery."

W. Newton hit and run nets driver year in jail trial immediately following the verdict. Chavero was ordered held on $20,000 surety, or $2,000 cash bail, pending the outcome of his appeal and forfeited his passport to authorites as a precaution to prevent him from leaving the country.

Burtt, seated in a wheelchair with her right leg and right arm still plastered in casts, appeared in court yesterday to testify for the prosecution, saying she did not remember much about the early-morning Aug. 25 incident.

The accident occurred at about 1:45 a.m. in front of the Store 24 on Watertown Street, testimony showed. Chavero, driving a 1981 Fiat, struck Burtt as she was crossing the street, dragging her atop the car's hood for about 400 feet before she was thrown to the street.

"I saw no cars coming from either direction, so I proceeded to cross the street," Burtt said. "I then looked back toward West Newton Square and saw a car about three feet away from me with no headlights on. That's the last thing I remember."

Awaking more than 24 hours later in a Newton-Wellesley Hospital bed, Burtt testified she was left temporarily blind from the accident and still undergoes physical therapy for relief of pain. She later resigned her job because she could no longer perform all her duties.

Also appearing on behalf of the prosecution were the two men who witnessed the accident and chased down the suspect, apprehending him behind his Cottage Court apartment and returning him to the scene of the accident.

Robert Gorgone, 21, of West Newton, and Michael Kelleher, 21, of Weston, were commended by the city for their actions and received special praise yesterday from Basbas.

"I want to compliment the young men who had the courage and decency to assist this young woman," Basbas said. "They are deserving of praise."

Gorgone and Kelleher were recently given the "Good Citizen Award" by the city's Crime Prevention Commission for their assistance to police.

Chavero, who was convicted of driving under the influence in Waltham District Court last January, faces a surrender hearing there tomorrow for violating the terms of his probation.

His attorney described Chavero in court as an exemplary student who only began to run afoul of the law "10 short months ago" when he was convicted of driving under the influence for the first time.

"I don't believe anyone believes Edgard Chavero is not truly sorry and remorseful for what has happened," Murray said. "He has tremendous sorrow for what happened."

KEENE, N.H.— Elizabeth Flagg of Newton, a junior at Keene State College, was the star of the campus show this past weekend as she performed in Moss Hart's theatrical satire "Light Up The Sky."

Ms. Flagg played Frances Black, wife of the producer of the show within a show that played at the Arts Center of Keene Stte College.

The performance was standing room only Saturday night. After the performance the Newton student-actress was surrounded with flowers, relatives and friends who applauded her part in the play which was set in the 1940s and updated for modern audiences.

The production has been entered in the Region I competititon of the American College Theatre Festival which is presented and produced by the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

Individual Process of Conscious Evolution

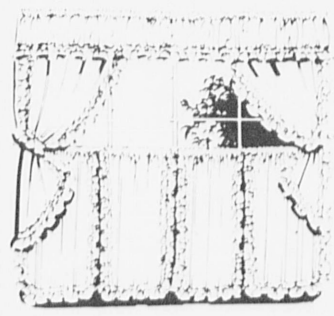

Participate in this Boston survey and receive as a gift the Book "Logosophy - Science and Method" by Raumsol

1. If every living thing in nature has a defined objective, what is the real object of human life?
2. Do you think that the Universe was designed as an organized unit, or came into existence by chance?
3. Suppose all there is to know about Life could be explained to you. What would you like to know?
4. Do you think that our destiny is pre-established by fate or are we able to shape it?
5. Since Justice consists in granting each individual his due, why are some people endowed from birth with aptitudes superior to others?
6. To what cause do you attribute the individual differences that are evident even between brothers and sisters as to capability, character, inclination, etc.?
7. Did you know that Logosophy deals with the knowledge of one's self, with individual self betterment and the conscious orientation of one's own life?

Exclusive interview

Sakharov family lives in doubt

By Correspondent Laurel Babcock and Staff Writer Edward Cafasso

NEWTON CENTRE — For almost seven months now, shadows of doubt and fear have hung over the Newton Centre home of exiled Soviet dissident Andrei D. Sakharov's family.

Their ordeal has taken on almost cloak-and-dagger proportions, but the Maplewood Avenue family has remained hopeful - despite the KGB's best efforts to misinform, confuse and frustrate any attempt to determine the true fate of Sakharov and his wife, Yelena G. Bonner, both of whom have been quarantined by Soviet authorities since early May.

In an exclusive interview Friday, Alexei Semyonov, the stepson of the 63-year-old physicist, called for a United Nations' resolution in support of his parents, described the mindset at the root of KGB-inspired propaganda and expressed his family's belief believe that someday Sakharov and Bonner will be allowed to join them here.

Semyonov, who is Bonner's son, lives in Newton Centre with his 29 year-old wife, Liza Alexyeva, their two-year-old daughter, his 34 year-old sister Tatyana Yankelvitch, who is Bonner's daughter, Tatyana's 34 year-old husband, Effraim, their two children, and Bonner's 84 year-old mother, Ruth.

Many of them will be voting in their first presidential election next week.

Semyonov said he believes both his parents are still alive, but said he does not know whether they are continuing their hunger strike.

At last report, Sakharov was said to be back at work and living with Bonner in their apartment in Gorky, a city of one million people about 250 miles east of Moscow. Serving as the headquarters of Soviet military research, Gorky is closed to Westerners and has been Sakharov's home since 1980 when Russian authorities exiled him there.

Like many of the reports emanating from Moscow, separating truth from purposeful deception is difficult.

"We have no independent confirmation of this story. The problem is that all the information about my parents coming from the Soviet Union is controlled by the KGB. In many cases, the stories were deliberately incorrect, but, in this particular case, we just don't know yet," said the 28 year-old former Brandeis University mathematics teacher who now works at Northeastern University in Boston.

Semyonov has not spoken to his mother since April or his Nobel-laureate father since 1980 and has often speculated that the KGB may be monitoring the activities of the dissident's family here. Bonner, who had been allowed to travel between Moscow and Gorky, was her husband's only link to the free world until she too was recently sentenced to internal exile in Gorky.

She would often call Semyonov in Newton, but, if their phone conversations began to get into too much detail concerning the status of the human rights activist, the line between Moscow and the Garden City would go dead, he said.

In mid-May, two weeks after Sakharov reportedly began a hunger strike in an attempt to persuade the Russians that Bonner should be allowed to go abroad for medical treatment, an Italian journalist received a phone call from a woman purporting to be Bonner saying the scientist was dead, Semyonov said.

> 'The problem is that all the information about my parents coming from the Soviet Union is controlled by the KGB. In many cases, the stories were deliberately incorrect.'
> Alexei Semyonov

"For sure, it was not my mother. It could have been a KGB test of Western reaction to his death. The reaction was very strong in the West, which caused denials (that Sakharov had died) a few days later in the Soviet Union," Semyonov said.

His mathematician friend, who first broke the news of Sakharov's hunger strike, was only released from house arrest two weeks ago.

During this summer's drama, "Isvestia," the Soviet government's official newspaper, printed a story calling Bonner "a shallow, resentful, greedy person ready to sell and betray everybody and everything for her own profit. Her basic goal was to escape to the West even if meant over her husband's dead body."

According to Semyonov, "The propoganda machine was working very hard to discredit my mother, but it was very hard to do so because of my father's long-standing status in the Soviet Union.

"On the other hand, my mother is partly Jewish, so the Soviet press plays on the anti-semitic feelings of the Russians. It's easier to believe many things about her than it would be about him. Whatever they write about her casts a shadow of doubt over him," he added.

The KGB's confusion campaigns pertaining to Sakharov and Bonner are numerous, and meant to keep his family, Western officials calling for the couple's release, and Western journalists off balance, Semyonov said.

"I think the KGB did have the goal of burying my parents alive in Gorky and not allowing a word to come out, but, in July, this news blockade was scratched. The KGB started to leak itself because they thought it was dangereous not to do so because of the possibility (of Western journalists learning the truth themselves). Once they began to leak information, it became easier for us to check ... We can get information from people in Moscow — if the people in Moscow can get information from Gorky," according to Semyonov.

Bonner's mother, Ruth, applied for visas in July that would allow Semyonov and his sister, Tatyana, to visit Moscow. They have not yet received a reply from Soviet authorities on their application, he said.

The possibility that the Soviet's will not release Sakharov, who helped create the first Russian hydrogen bomb, because of his knowledge of their military activities is far-fetched, according to Semyonov, adding that his father's security clearance was revoked in 1968.

"My father is a person whose integrity is very much known and I don't think he would volunteer such information. I don't think the American government would force him to do so if the Soviet government couldn't," Semyonov said.

"The Soviet establishment has to maintain the position that anyone who leaves the establishment should suffer — it shouldn't be a common affair," he added.

Two doctors at George Washington University, in a statement authorized by Semyonov and his family, have called the medical problems of both "multiple, complex and extremely grave." Bonner, whose eyesight is failing, has had three heart attacks since Apirl 1983 and takes 20 to 30 nitroglycerene tablets each day to combat her angina attacks. The doctors concluded that, in light of the stress caused by their mutual hunger strike, the couple is "in immmediate danger."

Semyonov said he is "sure (the Reagan administration) is doing something (to gain his parents' release), but I'm not quite sure they're doing enough ... I would like the Western countries to introduce a resolution (at the United Nations) in support of my father. What happens to my parents is a contradiction of what the UN stands for."

He admits it has been hard for members of his family to lead a normal life and still act as the only free contacts Bonner and Sakharov have left. They are continually beseiged by calls from the media, mainly wire service reporters, asking them to confirm or deny or comment on the latest rumors emanating from Moscow and have literally travelled to the ends of the earth in an effort to stir public outcry on their parents' behalf.

Despite the frustrations, they cling to the hope that, someday, Bonner and Sakharov will join them here.

"I think that it is possible that, at one point in the relations with the West, the Soviets will finally find it profitable to resolve this problem. I don't know if it'll actually happen, but it's possible," Semyonov said.

Newtonville

More than just a stop on the railroad

By Suzanne M. Dulude
Asst. News Editor

During the early 19th century, it was appropriately called "Hull's Crossing," as the prime landmark in the village was the farm of War of 1812 Gen. William Hull, son-in-law of the prominent Judge Abraham Fuller.

But, just after that time, when the Boston and Worcester Railroad branched out to West Newton in 1834, Hull's Crossing or more commonly, Newtonville, came of age.

Just as the introduction of the railroad had spurred growth in Newtonville's sister villages, the north-central farming community followed suit.

Prior to that time, the farmland adjacent to the railroad had offered little along the lines of the romantic, picturesque scenery common to some other villages. It was merely the midway point between West Newton and Newton Corner.

As Newtonville was developing into a more organized community, it was gaining prominence within the city as well. Hull's Crossing's general location as a midpoint became important when the city decided to construct a high school building to serve the entire town.

Massachusetts had passed state law requiring each town with a population of 4,000 or more to instigate some method of high school instruction. Having qualified, Newton first experimented by setting up instruction in the grammar school in Newton Centre open to pupils from the whole town.

According to the "Tercentenary History of Newton" by Henry K. Rowe, "The experiment was decided a success ... It was soon evident that a single high school was preferable to the department plan, though many persons were opposed to it, and there was the usual rivalry between the villages over its location ... In 1859, the town was willing to vote for the construction of a new building (on Walnut Street) in Newtonville and in September the high school opened there with 75 pupils."

The growing number of students in the thriving suburban village made expansion of the facility imperative. The first major renovation came about 15 years later, when a tower and new roof were added to update the building according to the architectual fashion of the day. At the end of the century, the Newton Classical High School and the Newton Technical High School were built to further accomodate the growing student population.

But the entire complex, including a gymnasium, was demolished when Newton North High School was completed in 1973. Newtonville, then, has been the original and only seat to the city's high school, excepting the concurrent existence of Newton South High School in Newton Centre.

> A middle-class air became Newtonville, as, unlike Nonantum, there were no factories to draw working class people to the village.

The Civil War Era in Newtonville was one characterized by rapid growth. Between 1860 and 1875, a post office, fire station, apothecary, insurance agency and several stores were all established to serve the needs of the growing local population. A middle-class air became Newtonville, as, unlike neighboring Nonantum, there were no factories to draw working class people to the village. What few workers' houses were built along the railroad tracks, were later demolished for the transportation improvements.

Opportunistic real estate operators, like those who readily developed land in West Newton, began buying up lots in Newtonville. Alexander Wadsworth, a Boston surveyor who laid out Kenrick, Walnut and Waban parks in Newton Corner and Webster Park in West Newton, was among them. He was responsible for an 1850 plan for 37 houselots near the railroad line. Averaging three-quarters of an acre each, these spacious lots lined Bowers Street and the northerly side of Newtonville Avenue, between Walnut and Harvard streets.

Another strong personality in Newtonville's past, who was also attracted to the area by its suburban nature, was William Claflin. Having made his fortune in the wholesale leather business, the soon-to-be-governor Claflin moved to Newtonville in 1855 when his mansion there was completed. Located on the corner of Walnut and Austin streets, presently the center of the Newton North High School athletic field, his estate was best remembered as "The Old Elms."

The late Ellen Kimbell, who, in 1921 at the age of 80, wrote her "Early Reminiscences of Newtonville," recalled Claflin's arrival in the suburban village: "The event added much to our social life, and many will recall the delightful gatherings in that home, where one was privileged in meeting many distinguished people; among them our beloved poet, Whittier, Longfellow, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Lucy Larcom, Henry Ward Beecher, Oliver Wendall Holmes, and many others too numerous to mention."

She continued her account: "Once a little child asked if she were in 'Heaven,' when she first came to the 'Old Elms,' as the place was named, on account of its lovely old trees. Newcomers to the Newtonville of today cannot realize what this home and its hospitality added to our quiet lives."

Kimbell's grand niece, Suzanne (Slocum) Berkeley, has spent all but 10 years of her life in Newtonville. "I was brought up in Newtonville, with the exception of 10 years that I spent in New York City," the Otis Street resident said.

Berkeley's father, Charles Pulsifer Slocum, was Kimbell's nephew and her grandfather was Winfield S. Slocum, whose advertisement for City Solicitor of Newton and attorney appears on the border of this page.

Berkeley differentiated Newtonville from its neighboring village only by terrain. Both West Newton and Newton Corner have "hills," typically inhabitted by the city's wealthier residents, whereas in "the valley," as she called her homeland, "I guess that's where the 'poor' people live," she said with a chuckle.

(Next week, the eighth article in the series will explore the past of another of the city's railroad villages, Auburndale.)

The Masonic Building, left, is one of the few remaining early structures in Newtonville Square. The large photograph was taken from atop Bram's Tire on the corner of Walnut and Washington streets, while the 1930 picture (inset) was taken from a similar angle. Notice that the bridge over the Massachusetts Turnpike has since been rebuilt, as it is not bowed in the earlier shot.

Bridge Studio invites players to follow its move to Reading

WOBURN — Alberta Albersheim, Helen Holzwasser, Bob Trager and Randy and Linda Ray are among the Newton residents who have been playing bridge regulary at Dawson's Bridge Studio in Woburn, and are expected to follow the club to its new location at the Pearl Street School in Reading, when it opens there on Nov. 1.

The Studio, which has been at the Woburn site for 10 years, is directed by Dennis and Jackie Dawson of Reading, themselves master bridge players. The Studio has attracted many residents of Newton and vicinity to its games of "duplicate bridge," so called because each table plays the same hands, thus matching the skill of the players under controlled conditions, and greatly heightening the competitive spirit. For those interested more in recreation than competition, however, the Dawson Studio also offers social bridge and supervised play.

Interested persons from Newton are always welcome to drop in and see the Studio, at its new location on Pearl Street, off Salem Street (Route 129), just minutes from Reading Square.

TDD phone brings help to deaf

NEWTON — Deaf and hearing-impaired community residents will be able to get emergency medical help when they need it, thanks to the new TDD phone line recently installed in Newton-Wellesley Hospital's Emergency Department.

The TDD-Teletype Device for the Deaf can be described as a "typewriter telephone." By using an electronic keyboard hooked up to a home phone line, a deaf or hearing-impaired person can contact the hospital Emergency Department directly in the event of an urgent medical problem. The message is printed out in the Emergency Department, where trained staff members can respond via the Department's keyboard set-up. The Emergency Department can then offer advice, or send a rescue vehicle if necessary.

The TDD has been operating at the hospital for several weeks, and can be reached through home systems by calling 969-2960. Since only one person at a time can be handled on the system, users are requested not call in only for true emergencies, and not for routine questions or minor problems.

Deaf and hearing-impaired individuals who are interested in obtaining a TDD for their home can contact the Deaf Community Center, a non-profit organization, at 75 Bethany Road, Framingham, or call 875-3617.

Lily Blau is 2000th baby born at Newton-Wellesley

Newton residents Ron Blau and his wife, Judy Levin, say that they got two pieces of "great news" at Newton-Wellesley Hospital very early on Sept. 25. Their first child, born at 2:23 a.m., was a healthy 6 lb. 13 oz. girl.; and their first turned out to be a hospital first, as well - the 2000th baby born at Newton-Wellesley Hospital in 1984.

Little Lily Blau, as the 2000th baby to be born during the year's "baby boom," was a great source of excitement not just to her parents but to the hospital staff as well. Dr. Robert Margulis, who delivered Lily, explains that the hospital's family centered maternity care is attracting the two populations responsible for the rising birth rate in the Boston area.

The generosity of area merchants helped celebrate the birth of Newton-Wellesley's 2000th baby. The happy parents enjoyed a bottle of champagne from Blanchard's of Newton, as well as a free month of diaper service for Lily from DyDee Service. Baby Lily received a gift from the Carter's Outlet in Needham and free photos from Picture Service, a Connecticut firm.

Flowers from Fraser's Florists of Wellesley went to Lily's parents and to all parents of babies born during the last week in September. Judy Levin, who took advantage of Newton-Wellesley's "early discharge" option and left the hospital the day of Lily's birth, admitted that she was particularly looking forward to one donated gift. Courtesy of Mother Care in Newton, she will enjoy three free days of special home services designed to help the excited but tired new parents as they begin their life with a new baby.

The current focus of the Newton group's activties is on cases from Mexico, South Korea and Yugoslavia. the cases which are exhaustively researched by the central Amnesty office, concern such people as Mustafa Spahic, a Muslim religious offical from Yugoslavia. Employment options

Women's Center opens door

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

AUBURNDALE — Garden City women looking for the right doorways into the employment marketplace need not travel much farther than their own backyard.

The Women's Center at Lasell Junior College, which opened its doors last September, offers 17-week courses in Travel and Tourism, Fashion Merchandising and Electronic Office Management, as well as a number of paid internships with field-related industries in the Boston and Greater Boston area.

Although the courses or the name might sound like other continuing education programs in the area, there are "fringe benefits" at the Women's Center which female career-seekers might not find elsewhere, according to Dean of Continuing Education, Ruth Ann Brooks.

According to Brooks, the Women's Center provides a unique "total packaging" concept which not only equips women with skills for careers, but also addresses the emotional, physical and psychological changes which accompany the woman's job-related decisions.

"The Women's Center was put together in a specific kind of way," Brooks says. "Women need a supportive atmosphere and a comfortable place to discuss issues of change."

The "supportive atmosphere" Brooks is describing includes an old-fashioned white house with white wicker chairs, plants, pastel rugs and framed museum prints. A currently empty second-floor room will soon echo the sounds of kids romping about while their mothers confer about careers in a conference room next door.

Ruth Ann Brooks

It is a "home-like" atmosphere and residential location which Brooks says women consider "safer" than more institutional or city-centered schools. "We're known for our small, personalized approach," she says. "It is crucial to follow through with this."

Working out at the on-fitness center on campus is also a unique, but integral and required part of the career-change process.

Brooks established the program in the space of six months, during which the vibrant, energetic educator and professional fashion coordinator contacted industries and local organizations, sent out questionnaires and recruited future internship sites.

The results of her rapid, but thorough, study were that there are many "mature" women, ranging in age from 25 to 75, who have completed a portion of some higher education degree and now "find themselves looking for new avenues." They include young women changing careers, wives and mothers re-entering the workforce after years of raising a family and older divorced or widowed women who need skills to become professionally marketable.

On the other side of the survey, Brooks located holes in the marketplace just waiting for "mature women" to fill them.

"Not only did the people from Neiman-Marcus, Bloomingdale's and the other stores, travel agencies and computer companies I contacted say there is a need, they told me, 'If you provide the right women, we'll hire them,'" Brooks says.

And that is exactly what the Women's Center has started to do.

The newly hired dean boasts a first-year enrollment at the center of 65 women attending courses co-designed by the actual industries themselves.

In addition to the morning, noon and night courses designed to meet the varying schedules of women, the center offers skills assessment workshops and career development courses which help to determine and refine the woman's resume. Saturday afternoons offer financial planning, stock market and goal setting workshops.

Brooks' efforts have produced results even she not expect.

"Some of the women have talked about joining efforts and starting businesses together," Brooks says. "There really is no other place quite like this."

The Women's Center is located on the campus of Lasell Junior College, off Commonwealth Avenue in Auburndale. For more information, call Ruth Ann Brooks at 243-2146.

City celebrates UN Day

By Frank DeBenedetto
Correspondent

NEWTON — Newton has a United Nations of its own.

Last week, the people of Newton celebrated their ethnic diversity on the 39th anniversary of the founding of the United Nations, in the third annual United Nations Day at Aquinas Junior College.

This year's theme was "Newton's Own United Nations," a program highlighted by international food, song and dance.

"The purpose of this program," said Program Chairman Leonard Zakim of Newton Corner, "is to shift from the failure of the U.N. to resolve differences, to an emphasis on the united nations we find in Newton which is ethnically, reliously and culturally diverse."

That diversity was exemplified by the flowing Andes rythms of 'Fortaleza,' a four-man Bolivian folk group, and The Unique Dominoes, a six-man, local breakdancing group that twisted and spinned in a truly American art form which originated in the Bronx, N.Y.

That, combined with the joyous Filipino cultural dancing of 'Iswelahung Pilipino' (Filipino School of Newton), and the mezmorizing Israeli songs of Cantor Alex Zimmer, of Temple Ohabei Shalom, was enough to let the people there know that Newton is much richer culturally than it is often given credit, according to Jane Chiong, of Auburndale, artistic director of the evening's program.

"Your neighbor's culture is a part of your wider self," Chiong said, following the performances.

"The premise of U.N. Day culturally is to alert people of the different ethnic and racial groups that are a part of this city," she said. "Every year I meet people here who had no idea of how many different nations were represented in the city. All you have to do is go to Newton North to see the diversity," said Chiong.

Both Chiong and Zakim put the nuber of ethnic groups in the Garden City at about 53, a number they said is growing.

Visitors were also invited to sample food from many countries that ranged from Sweden to Taiwan to Venezuela, and many countries in between.

Special guests at the celebration included consuls from the countries of Canada, Chile, Japan, the United Kingdom, Taiwan, and a former Secratary of State of Angola, who now lives in Newton.

Mayor Theodore D. Mann offered his official welcome to the evening's guests and said that he hoped the U.N. Day would become a tradition that would endure. Also present were Board of Aldermen President Emeritus Wendell R. Bauckman, Alderman Verne Vance, Jr., Alderman Luois Irwin, and several School Committee members.

Friends bid a fond farewell to Delulio

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

NEWTON — When a crowd of faculty and students gathered in the Newton North High School library to say farewell to Dr. Robert S. DeIulio, there seemed to be the sense that he wasn't really leaving.

In a way, he isn't.

According to faculty and students who have worked with the former head of North's guidance department since 1973, DeIulio infused a sense of humanity and caring into the school which will never be forgotten.

"He was always thinking of what guidance should be," says acting Head of Guidance Dr. Peter A. Mackie. "He's made the department a metaphor for development."

Thanks to his thinking, new and innovative programs were established, precedents were set and awards were won in the department and around the school, Mackie said.

As guidance head, DeIulio actively participated in the S.T.O.P. anti-nuclear student group, established the first career exploration program, helped students to gain more control in the college application process, rallied groups together around important issues, and initiated a series of secondary psychology and education conferences which have been ongoing now for 10 years at North and other High Schools. His work also garnered the sole secondary School Counseling Award for Newton North.

It wasn't only what he did in the department, but how he did it that really made a difference, his colleagues say.

"It's his quality of leadership, the manner in which he cares for students as people" that North principal Dr. Marya Levinson will miss.

"He's the best listener I've ever met," said social worker Glorianne Wittes. "He helps you to be more creative than you would be otherwise. There is a sense of warmth and caring about him which helps you to be your best."

DeIulio started his distinguished career as an undergraduate history and English major at Boston College. Throughout the years, he returned to his alma mater to earn both a master's degree and Ph.d in education and guidance.

DeIulio and the Newton Public Schools first met in 1958, when DeIulio served as an English, social studies teacher and attendance counselor.

DeIulio left the Garden City in 1963 to become director of student activities at Boston University's College of Basic Studies, where he was also associated with the psychology and guidance department.

In 1971, DeIulio returned as a school psychologist for the Newton Public Schools and two years later became head of the North guidance department.

Today, as he sets his sights toward the new challenges as director of pupil services for the Lexington schools, DeIulio says he is feeling a bit "overwhelmed. There's a real sense of community here. There are relationships I've developed over 18 years that will stay with me forever."

And just to remind him the feeling is mutual, faculty and staff presented DeIulio with an elegant and weighty tome of Michelangelo reproductions and history, as well as a solid, brass-framed certificate in which a message of appreciation is inscribed in calligraphy.

"He has given us a great sense of humanity and left us a legacy of enhanced self-esteem," Mackie said. "We are all richer for that."

Newton South gets revenge

By Mike Stoller
Sports Correspondent

NEWTON — Sometimes things just don't come easy and you must pay the price to get what you want. Such was the case for the Newton South football Lions on Saturday afternoon when they nipped a very strong West Roxbury club, 14-12, in a "rock'em sock'em" battle that South coach Art Kojoyian said was his team's "physically toughest game all year."

The win helped even the score for last year's West Roxbury victory which ruined South's chances at an undefeated season.

Trailing, 12-8, midway through the third quarter, the Lions would prevail when Newton quarterback Steve Altman promptly rifled a perfect 14-yard touchdown strike to tight end Ben Hochberger. That capped a 59-yard drive which saw star tailback Kevin Rollins rush for 21 yards and three first downs. Rollins piled up 101 rushing yards, including a touchdown, on the game, giving him 915 yards, including 16 TDs, for the season.

It was the Lions' stingy "D," however, that enabled South to come away with the victory. The dynamic duo of Rollins and Huffman are well-known around the Dual County League for their great offensive abilities, but Kojoyian has said all season that both players are just as strong on defense.

Case in point: Rollins recovered two fumbles and made an interception, while Huffman picked off a pair of passes in the crucial fourth quarter.

Rollins' first fumble recovery came in the initial period when he pounced on a loose ball that the Raiders had trouble handling on a punt return.

The Lions took over deep in West Roxbury territory, but couldn't put the leather into the end zone. The Raiders hit hard and stopped the Lions cold on the nine yardline, as Altman's field goal attempt — which was South's first field goal try of the season — was off to the right.

The Raiders drew first blood on the ensuing possession. They took over on their own 20 and marched 80 yards for a touchdown on a drive that featured the West Roxbury aerial attack at its best.

After the home team advanced to the Lion 44 using its ground game effectively, quarterback Martin Somers hooked up with wide recievers Scott Andre and Darryl Morris for 15 and 13-yard gains respectively. Then the Raider signal caller delivered a perfectly thrown ball to Andre down the right sideline for a 30-yard TD toss.

The drive, which started late in the first quarter, ended in the second period. The conversion failed, but West Roxbury led, 6-0.

The Lions finally broke out of their cage on their next possession. From their own 31, Altman spotted Derryck Harrell for an nine-yard gain. Then Harrell (40 yards on nine carries) and Rollins picked apart the Raider defense on the ground. Rollins rushed for 26 yards and Harrell muscled his way for 23 more on the 14-play, 69-yard drive that ended with Rollins scoring his 16th touchdown of the season. He also ran for the conversion to give South an 8-6 edge.

West Roxbury's next attempt to score was foiled when Greg Thomas (85 yards on 12 carries) coughed up the ball after gaining 15 yards and putting his team in Lion territory. Harrell made a heads up play, pouncing on the loose ball and giving his team control on its own 45 yardline.

The Raiders, however, were equal to the task once again, as they sacked Altman for a 10-yard loss and stopped the Lions on four plays. South had to settle for an 8-6 halftime lead.

"They were blitzing an eight-man front," said Kojoyian, referring to the Raiders defensive alignment in the first half. "They presented difficulty....We had opportunities to score, but they muddy you up."

The third quarter blues hit the Lions right away, as West Roxbury took the opening drive of the second half 69 yards for six points. Thomas did the bulk of the work, plowing his way through for 37 yards and scoring the eventual touchdown on an 11-yard sprint up the middle. Newton suddenly trailed, 12-8.

But hard work and determination would pay off for the Lions on this day. Rollins fumbled on the first play of South's next possession, but the junior tailback thought he was tackled before the ball popped loose. The official ruled otherwise, West Roxbury took over on offense, but South soon made the point moot.

It was Rollins who got South back on the right track just two plays later when he stripped the ball from the Raiders and put the visitors back in business on their own 41.

"I think a wrong (the official's call) rights itself," said Kojoyian of the quick exchange of possessions.

Rollins also redeemed himself on offense, as it was that very next drive when he mustered up those crucial 21 yards that led to the eventual winning score. From the South 39, he broke loose for an 11-yard gain and a first down. Then Altman ran for nine more on the bootleg. After Rollins gave the Lions another first down to the West Roxbury 14, Altman delivered a strike to a kneeling Hochberger in the center of the end zone.

Then South's defense rose to the occasion, as it held Thomas and fellow back Tony Hill to zero and two yards respectively. The Raiders were also hampered with another five-yard penalty and the Lions forced the home team to punt.

The Raiders stopped a 45-yard Lion drive that ended on the six. West Roxbury called time out.

The break in the action, however, only worked to South's benefit because on the subsequent play Huffman made his first interception on Somer's 45-yard bomb and ran it back 25 yards. A facemasking penalty cost West Roxbury 12 more yards, and the Lions had yet another opportunity to score.

But again they couldn't do anything. Altman was sacked for an eight-yard loss on a fourth-and-long situation, and West Roxbury took over on its own 23.

Newton's Tommy Rogers was quick to return the favor, as he hit Somers for an 11-yard loss to put the Raiders on their own 11. Two plays later, Rollins came through with his big interception.

Although the Raiders held the Lions to only three rushing yards on their next drive, it was South who would have the last say in this game. Huffman intercepted a 37-yard pass by Somers on what was to be the last play of the game and school was out.

Later, Kojoyian said he had expected West Roxbury to give his team all the competition it did.

With the win, the Lions upped their record to 6-1 on the season. They will go for their third league victory and seventh overall when they play host to Acton-Boxboro in a big DCL showdown Saturday at 2 p.m.

North swimmers best Hawks in windup meet

With its primary challenges (Brockton and Framingham North) behind it, the Newton North girls' swim team used the final dual meet of the season to get a lot of girls some action in the Newton North pool in a 92-73 victory over Waltham.

Eight different girls won individual events for the Tigers, who finished first in nine of 11 events. Jodi Mitchell was the only individual winner for Waltham, winning the 100-yard butterfly in 1:24.9.

Newton coach Colleen White managed to spread the firsts out evenly among her swimmers, as none of the relay winners were individual winners, meaning 12 girls could come away saying they finished first.

The Hawks, 5-3 in the Suburban League, and the Tigers, 9-1, will meet again in the Suburban League meet on Friday, which is scheduled to be held at Brookline.

Tigers fall short in upset bid vs. un-un Arlington

By Roy LeBlanc
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The Tigers did everything they wanted to do except win the game on Saturday, as the Arlington Spy Ponders kept their Super Bowl hopes alive with a 20-13 decision over Newton North at Dickinson Field.

Going into the contest, the Tigers wanted to control the ball and hold down Arlington running back Gerry Cronin. They did both, running 20 more plays than the visitors (66-46), and holding Cronin to 31 yards on 10 carries.

What the Tigers couldn't do, however, was punch the ball into the end zone when they got the chance. They ran 66 plays on eight possessions, scored twice, turned the ball over once, and didn't punt all afternoon, which gives some indication of how many chances they had at the end zone.

If there's a hell for football coaches, it must be something like watching the Tiger offense miss its chances on Saturday. On the non-scoring drives, Newton advanced to the Arlington 10, 9, 6, 6, and 34, only once being stopped in its own zone.

"It was the most painful of all the losses because we were so close," admitted North coach Peter Capodilupo after the game. "I was proud of my team....We had our chances....but just came up short."

It's going to be tough for Capodilupo and the rest of the Tiger coaches and players to forget this one, a game filled with could've, would've and should've. It could have been a season-making victory. Instead it's just another loss, one that assures the Tigers of a non-winning season, as they drop to 2-5 with three games left.

Going into this one, everyone expected a defensive battle, based on Arlington's past performance. It certainly didn't start out that way, as four of the first five possessions ended in the end zone. Three of those scores belonged to Arlington QB Mike Campanelli, who ran over from the 4, 6 and 3.

Geoff Drew's nine-yard run answered for Newton.

The tone of the game was set on the first play. Newton won the toss and elected to receive, but Campanelli's kick came down and appeared to hit Chris Rutan and then Drew before bounding away. The Spy Ponders recovered on the 24, and had a golden opportunity.

The visitors immediately proved that they had the one thing that the Tigers lacked: an instinct for the jugular. Five plays later they were in the end zone, with Campanelli diving across from the four.

The Tigers didn't help their cause with a pass interference call that moved the ball from the 23 to the nine.

Newton shook that off, though, and immediately answered with an impressive drive. Marching 66 yards, entirely on the ground, the Tigers used Drew, Mark Adams, Rutan and Rusty Halloran to bull their way into the end zone. Adams and Rutan each gained 84 yards on the day. No back has done better for North this season.

Eleven plays into the drive, Drew bounced up the middle from the nine and the game was tied at six.

One big play led to the next Arlington score. On second down from the Spy Ponders' 48, Campanelli found tight end Steve Flynn downfield for a 49-yard gain. Flynn was stopped at the three by Colin Ryan. That was only a momentary setback for Arlington, as Campanelli took it in from the six (after a penalty).

After Newton's next possession ended with a seven-yard loss at the Arlington 17 on fourth down, the Spy Ponders put together their only real drive of the day. The Tigers helped get it started with a 15-yard facemask penalty.

The drive covered 83 yards, and again it was Campanelli's passing ability that proved surprising. Everyone knew he could run, but even Arlington coach John Hanley admitted that passing has been a problem this season.

Not this game, though. Campanelli completed only five tosses, but that added up to 152 yards. Two of the completions came on the final scoring drive, combining for 39 yards. The second, a 15-yarder to fullback Steve Morrison, brought the ball to the three and Campanelli took it in from there.

"Their quarterback was great," praised Capodilupo. "He did what he had to do for his team to win."

From there, it became a frustrating, yet in some ways gratifying, day for Newton. Gratifying in the sense that the Tigers proved they could play with a team that has Super Bowl intentions, based on a (now) 7-0 record. Frustrating in that the Tigers could have won the game.

Almost without exception, Newton moved the ball every time it had its hands on it. On the other side, Arlington was just about helpless.

Ironically, despite the yardage and the long drives, it took a turnover to spark the other Newton TD.

After a bad snap on a punt attempt, Arlington's Dan Croke made a bad situation worse by trying to pass after picking up the ball. Ray Rowland was there to pick it off for Newton and returned it to the Arlington six. Three plays later Halloran went in from the one. Dave Redmond's kick finished the scoring.

It may have finished the scoring, but certainly not the opportunities. On their next two possessions, the Tigers fell short on fourth-down plays from inside the Arlington 12. Following the second of those, the Spy Ponders put together their second long possession of the day, although it didn't result in a TD. Arlington did put it in the end zone twice, but it was called back both times.

The first came when Morrison took off from his own 42 for an apparent 58-yard gallop to paydirt. That was brought back to the Newton 28 when one of his teammates was caught clipping, though only the guilty party knows why, as Morrison wasn't about to be caught.

From there, Morrison took most of the load in pounding the ball down to the two, and this time Campanelli went in. Again, though, the yellow flag nullified the score.

The Tigers had what they thought would be their last life, but this time the Arlington D dug in and shut Newton down. Rich Arena made the big play, stopping Steve DelGrosso in the open field after a short reception.

Arlington got the ball back on downs with 2:43 left, seeming to only have to pick up a first down or two and run out the clock. It wasn't that simple, however, as Morrison fumbled the ball away on the first play. Alex DeNucci fell on it and the Tigers were alive once more.

Halloran looked as sharp on this drive as he has all season. He was cool and in command as he marched his club down the field in the two-minute drill, completing five straight passes. The Tigers went 45 yards in eight plays, and still had plenty of time to cover the remaining territory.

Pass number six proved to be Halloran's undoing, however, as Arena was there to squash the Tigers' hopes again with an interception at his own 34.

With 36 seconds left, this time the visitors didn't even need to try a handoff.

The continued improvement in Newton North must have a lot of people on the Quincy coaching staff very nervous. The Tigers invade Memorial Field on Saturday at 2 p.m., and will be anxious to try out their newfound muscle on the 3-3 Presidents.

Newton Catholic in volleyball final

NEWTON — St. Patrick's of Watertown and Newton Catholic were due to square off for the Catholic Suburban League volleyball title on Wednesday night at 7:30 p.m. at Newton Catholic. The two teams earned the right to go to the finals by sweeping to two-game victories in the semi-finals on Monday night, held at Newton Catholic.

The Lancers had little trouble in getting by Wakefield's Nazareth Academy, 15-6, 15-12.

Coach Rose Bertucci called it an "excellent" effort by her team. Kerry MacDougall, Shari Calabro and Joanne Abruzzi all served very effectively. Judy Jackson and Cheryl Chagnon passed well, while Angela Bove spiked the ball with authority.

Four of those six were named to the league's all-star team. Senior co-captains Calabro were cited, along with senior MacDougall and junior Abruzzi.

The Lancers upped their record to 13-1 with the victory.

North edged

The Newton North volleyball team came awfully close to its seventh victory of the season on Monday, but instead suffered its 10th loss, a 2-0 decision at Lynnfield. The Tigers were victimized by scores of 15-12, 16-14.

There were some bright spots in the loss, although Coach Jay Cradle indicated the Tigers were having problems getting the offense together.

Playing well for Newton were Debbie Visco, Deana Steinberg, Joanna Giddon and Laura Slamin. Visco served well, while Giddon sparkled defensively. Steinberg had some effective spiking.

The Tigers host Boston Latin Wednesday.

Gentile trick sparks Newton Pee Wees

BURLINGTON — Marcello Gentile scored a hat trick to lead the Newton Pee Wee AA's to a 9-3 victory over Somerville in Burlington on Saturday in Youth Hockey action. John Clark and Eric Haley scored a pair of goals each and Ken Golden and Mike Gannon rounded out the scoring with a goal apiece.

Chris Cucinotta assisted on four tallies, while Marc Cappello and Peter Abcunis shared the duties in goal.

In another Newton Youth Hockey League game, the Squirt A's won a pair of shutouts in their debut this week. Newton crushed Somerville, 9-0, while slipping by Lexington, 1-0.

Jesse Lock earned a hat trick in the big win while Joshua Sullivan scored one of his two goals on the weekend in the 1-0 win.

Mike Nick earned a pair of shutouts for the winners.

Dowling wins Tobin golf tournament

WESTON — Bob Dowling of Newton fired a 75 to capture the low gross title in the fourth annual Joe Tobin Open Golf Tournament, played at the Leo J. Martin Golf Club recently.

Dowling was low man among the 104 golfers to compete in the event, which is held to benefit the Newton Catholic High School Scholarship Fund.

Dave Gasdia turned in a 52 to earn the low net title in the Calloway event.

The tournament is named after the late resident of Nonantum, who was an MDC police officer.

The event was sponsored by The Place, owned by Mr. and Mrs. William Flynn.

An awards ceremony and dinner followed the tourney at The Place.

Newton's Peisch tops cross country race

LINCOLN — Ann Peisch of Newton emerged as the TAC Eastern Regional Cross Country champion recently as 71 girls and women competed on the trails of Mt. Misery Conservation Area.

Peisch, a member of the Liberty Athletic Club, won the challenging 5,000 meter race in a time of 18:53, and was followed by Jane Welzel of Moving Comfort, in 19:09.

The top master runner was Liberty's Mardi Reed from Alna, Maine. Liberty also was the team champ, placing five runners in the top 10.

Other area performers included Sally Goodhue of Weston, a member of the Waltham Track Club, who placed second in the 50-and-over division with at time of 23:35.

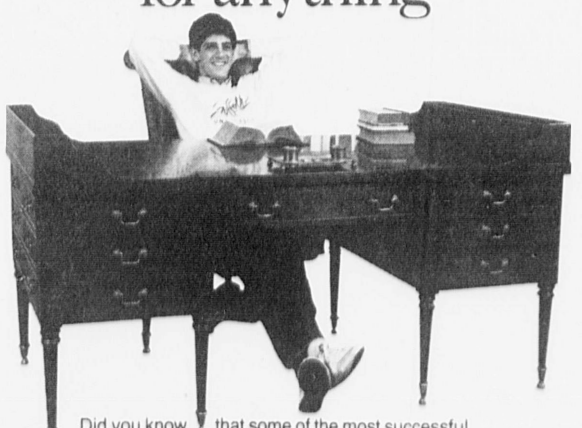

Jodi Lupo of Waltham placed fourth in the 3,000 meter 13-and-under race in a time of 12:53.

Waltham nips North, 1-0, in Suburban soccer showdown

Kenny Doyle knocked in a rebound from 12 yards out 32 minutes into the first half to lead Waltham High to a 1-0 victory over Newton North in a pivotal Suburban League boys' soccer clash on Monday at the Newton North Field.

"We were at war today," said Hawk coach John Graceffa. "We've got a lot of respect for them, and it was a great battle between a pair of good teams."

The victory gives Waltham a two-point edge over Newton in the standings, and a one-point lead over Cambridge, Rindge & Latin. The Hawks travel to Cambridge on Wednesday for a game that will probably decide the league championship. Waltham is now 10-1-5, with the only loss coming to Brookline.

The Hawks had a clear edge in the season series with Newton, earning five of a possible six points on a pair of wins and a tie.

The lone goal was set up on a throw in. Andrew Bernard put the ball in play from the right corner, and tossed it to Jimmy Kramer. He passed it back to Bernard, who crossed the ball to the middle. It bounced off a Tiger fullback, and rebounded out to Doyle at the 12-yard line.

Although he didn't hit the ball hard, it was a quick shot, and rebounded off the right post. The ball took a funny bounce, and spun into the goal.

"That goal really typified the game for us," said Newton North coach Roger Brown. "We just didn't get the good bounces. I have to give Waltham credit, they made the most of their opportunities."

The home team came out strong in the second half, and pressured Waltham up and down the field. "We just couldn't get anything going," said Graceffa. "They were beating us to the ball, and playing very tenaciously. We couldn't get possesion, but the defense kept shutting them down."

Joe Pulselli robbed the Newton North leading scorer, Peter Bourland, on a breakaway, diving to his right for a great save.

Graceffa praised sweeper Bob Johnson, stopper Mike LeBrun and wing fullbacks Tony O'Brien and David Gately, but said that is was a total team effort that decided the game.

Gary Scott played exceptionally between the posts for the Tigers, while Brown was very pleased with the play of his midfield. Artie Aaron, Ed O'Brien and Brian Scales all turned in good performances in the loss.

"It's dissapointing," concluded Brown, "but we still have a few games left, and we're looking forward to the tourney." The Tigers are now 11-4-1, and visit Quincy on Wednesday.

Kinsella goal lifts Tiger girls

WALTHAM — Jackie Kinslla led the Newton North girls' soccer team to a hard-fought 1-0 victory over Waltham on Monday for the Tigers' 16th win.

Barry "Fuzzy" Howland's squad is now 16-0 with the victory.

"They're a very good team," conceeded the coach, "But we outplayed them for the third time this season, so we're all tuned up for the tourney."

After a scoreless first half, Tina Rosenthal fed a nice pass to Kinsella, who broke past one fullback and put the ball past the goalie into the lower right hand corner.

The Tigers outshot Waltham, 30-14, but Hawk goalie Christine Hassell played an exceptional game to keep her team in the game.

It was Kinsella's first game back from a leg injury suffered in the last Waltham-Newton North battle, and she proved once again that she's one of the circuit's top players. "She may not be the top scorer in the league," praised Howland, "but I think she's the best player."

On the other side of the ledger, the vaunted Waltham offense, led by Kelly Vaughn, was shut down once again by the Tiger fullbacks. Co-Captain Jean Vendice combined with Kendra Daley, stopper Janet Burke, and Rebecca Lawton to hold Ray Comeau's squad scoreless.

"My halfbacks controlled the game," said Howland, "and it really helps us to have Jackie and Carolyn Natale back. Ann Meng, Cheryl Hager, Carol Ventura and Diane Tormey all played very well at midfield for us."

Liz Speliotis came of the bench to earn the shutout, as starting goalie Laura Yellen came out five minutes into the game with an injury.

"This was a nice tune-up for the states," concluded Howland, "and more importantly, it proved that we deserved the league championship."

The Tigers have been crowned with the league title in 10 of the past 11 seasons.

Now 16-0, Newton North hosts Quincy on Wednesday.

Newton South falls to C-C

The Lions scored on Concord-Carlisle for the first time in four years, but the one goal wasn't enough as Newton South lost to the Patriots, 4-1, in Dual County League action on Monday.

The winners scored twice at the end of the first half for a 2-0 lead, but the Lions battled back for a single tally right after the intermission.

Less than five minutes into the second period, Katrina Antonellis dribbled by four defenders and beat the C-C goalie one-on-one for the only Newton South score.

"The Concord kids were just lunging at her," said Coach Charles Hurwitz, "and she kept dragging the ball past them and put it in the lower right hand corner.

"We've had some closer games with Concord in the past few years," continued the coach, "but this time we went for the win and didn't hold anything back. Unfortunately, that created some opportunities for them."

Besides Antonellis, Hurwitz praised halfback Colleen Walsh and fullbacks Erica Kushner and Julie Schwartz.

Now 6-7-1, the Lions will be trying to end their season with an even record against a tough Lincoln-Sudbury squad at home on Wednesday.

South in swim loss

Westford Academy posted a 98-58 victory over Newton South swimmers in a meet Thursday. Westford Academy won eight of the 10 events. South's Liz Morrison swam a 1:12.7 in the 100-yard butterfly and Anjelica Brisk won the 500 freestyle with a 6:04.38.

Needham Street Corridor

Traffic signals coming

By Richard Nangle
Staff Writer

NEWTON HIGHLANDS — Traffic lights should soon be available for two Needham Street intersections involved in future development plans, ending a 10-year fight for a partial solution to the area's traffic woes.

State Rep. Susan Schur, D-Newton, said she received a commitment that funding for the lights would come from the state Department of Public Works.

Development plans for the traffic congested Needham Street must suit both business and residential concerns, according to a spokesman for a Cambridge consultant firm the city has hired to address the problem.

Lozano, White and Associates have been holding workshops with the Needham Street Corridor Task Force to help city officials, residents and businessmen understand each other's concerns, according to Edwardo Lozano, a partner in the firm.

The firm is scheduled to bring its report before the Department of Planning and Development sometime next week, Lozano said.

The workshops have taken into account traffic problems associated with new development, residential complaints of inability to get to and from their homes without long delays, and business concerns for development of new buildings, according to Theresa Walsh, head of the Charlemont-Winchester Street Association.

The task force included members of the business community, area residents, and members of the Upper Falls Community Development Corporation, Chamber of Commerce and Board of Aldermen.

Walsh said in the last 10 year years, two separate plans for the street have gone nowhere.

"This is the first planner who's taken it from home plate to base one," Walsh said of Lozano, White.

Needham Street and Highland Avenue in Needham were recently rated one of the 15 worst traffic areas in the state, she said.

These days a roundabout route can actually be the quickest way to get across the street during rush hour, Walsh said.

"I has reached a point where you take a right to take a left.

"Needham has done some intensive building on the other side of the bridge. There are people who spend 15 minutes on Needham Street just waiting for traffic," Walsh said.

Part of the problem, Walsh has surmised, is that Needham Street is a state road.

"If it had been a city street, I'm sure we would have had a (traffic) light long ago," she said.

"They have never rezoned Needham Street. It's an industrial zone. Anything goes as long as you can park a car near it," Walsh said.

Lozano said the two meetings, held in recent weeks, have been a productive starting point for drawing up development plans.

In the workshops, task force members were asked to consider scenarios where the city would either take no action at all to address Needham Street's problems; move to maximize taxes; or work for reduction of traffic.

"We've got a sense of the pros and cons and what we are trying to do is in a sense make a consensus," Lozano said.

He said all parties basically want to widen the street, maintain a neighborhood atmosphere and provide sufficient parking. Use of public transportation was also stressed, he said.

Lozano said any development must be of "quality rather than quantity" to maximize tax revenue for the city and minimize traffic impact.

Some compromises already reached include reducing the size of any new buildings from six to four stories and regulating the length of building setbacks from residential property to twice their height from the property line, Lozano said.

"We would like to give options for good development to take place. We don't want to leave any groups out of the planning process," he said.

"I think it makes a great deal of sense," Schur said of Lozano, White's approach.

She added that an important component of any plan would be an assurance that it would not become obsolete in the near future.

"The specifics that I need is whether there will or will not be control of development. I think there has to be," Schur said.

But will business acquiesce?

"I think some of them will and some of them won't. Hopefully it will be a majority of them who will," she said.

Bathroom dispute reaches resolution

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The bathroom dispute that had delayed aldermanic acceptance of a two-family Newton Centre home has been resolved and the house should be ready for low-income tenants in time for the new year, according to the city's housing development coordinator.

John Quatrale, housing official for the Newton Community Development Authority (NCDA), said last week the house at 399 Langley Road, which received occupancy permits almost a year ago, would probably be occupied by January if the Board of Aldermen grants it approval on Nov. 5.

Aldermanic Finance Committee Chairman Paul E. Coletti had single-handedly delayed aldermanic approval of the site for the last three months because the hallway leading into the first floor bathroom was less than two feet wide.

The dispute boiled over three weeks ago when Coletti angrily confronted the manager of the condominium project offering the home to the city for use as low income housing and promised that if something was not done to remedy the bathroom problem, he would move to reject acceptance of the site and attempt to stop occupancy of related luxury condominiums.

The stand-off ended when project manager Peter C. Kasch assured Coletti that the plumbing stacks that had been contributing to the bathroom's narrow entrance would be relocated so that the passageway could be the same width as the bathroom's door.

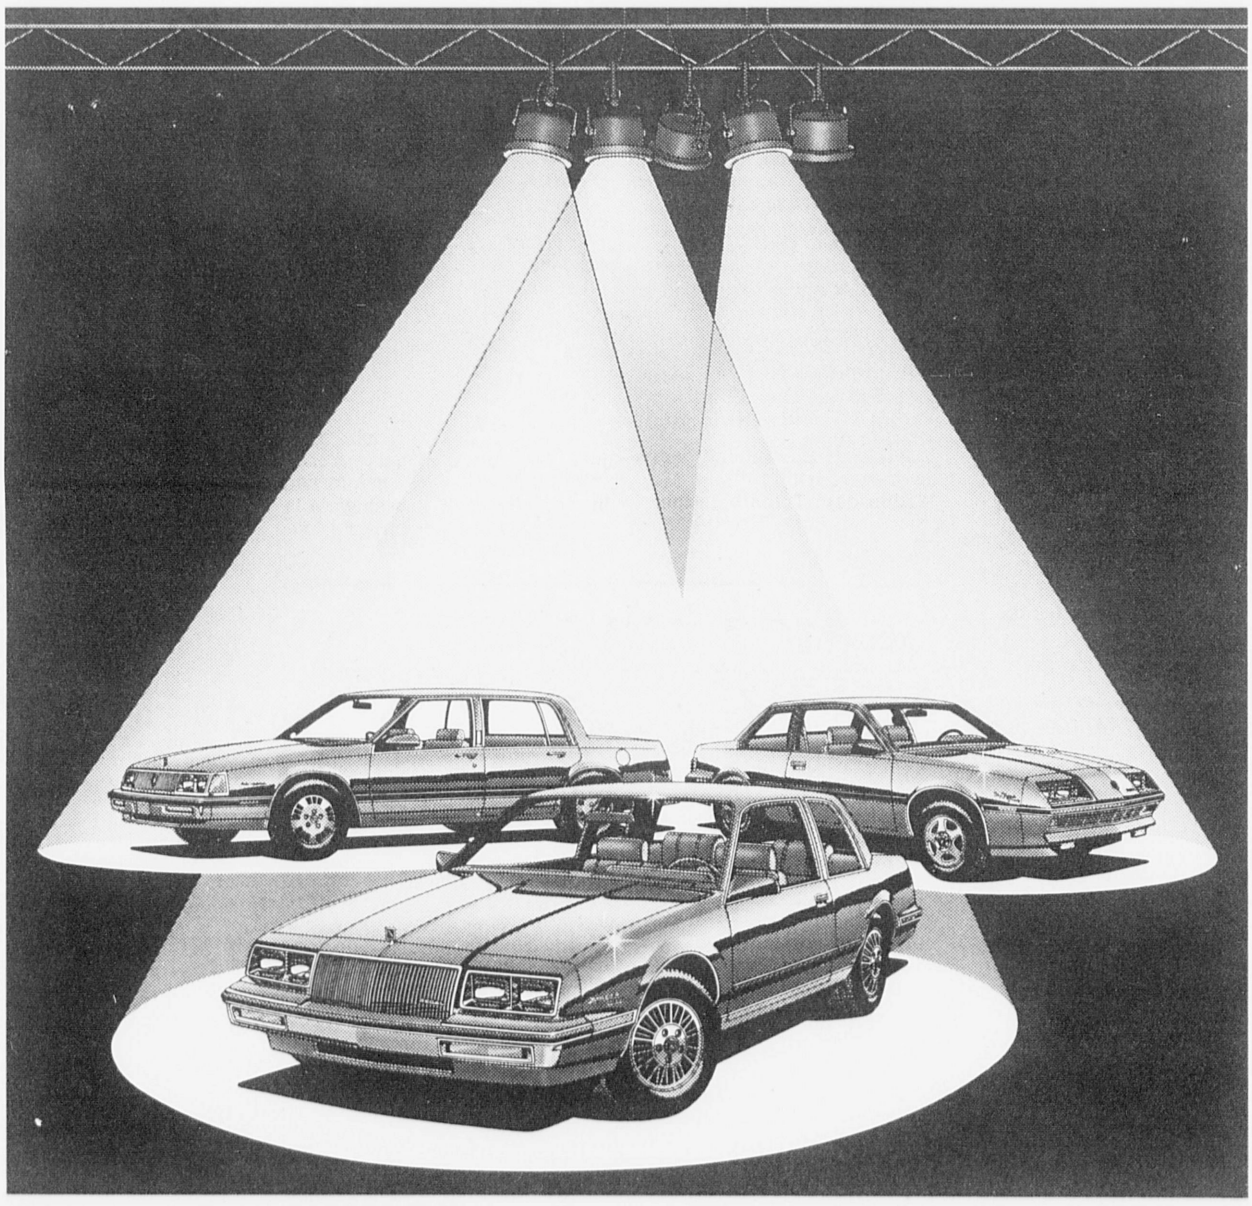

Kasch also agreed to check the bathroom's floor boards in an attempt to locate the urine smell that had been bothering aldermen and to repair plumbing problems in the second floor bathroom.

The Langley Road site is being offered to the NCDA for $110,000 by Brookline-based developer Mel Barkan as partial fulfillment of the special permit granted by the board for his 38-unit Fairway Condominium Project at the Chestnut Hill Golf Course.

Under the city's controversial "10 percent ordinance," when a developer receives a special permit increasing the density of a luxury project, he must provide the city — either on or off-site — with a proportionate number of low income or elderly housing units.

Kasch also told Coletti that Barkan was moving forward with the two other units owed the city under the ordinance and said they would be single-family homes built from scratch on two Bartlett Terrace lots a half-mile away from the Langley Road house.

"I'm happy with the fact he has agreed to make the necessary changes. I think my position on the whole thing sends a message back to other developers that aldermen won't accept anything less than what we ourselves would live in," the FinCom Chairman Coletti said.

Red Coach Grill being renovated

NEWTON CORNER — The Red Coach Grill at Newton Corner has permanently closed according to Burton Sack, President of Exeter Hospital Group.

Exeter Hospitality's parent company, Exeter Equities, acquired the Red Coach Grill Division of the Howard Johnson Company in March, 1983. Exeter Hospital is now in the process of renovating the existing facility which will reopen in mid-January in a completely different format and under a different name. Information on the new operation which will contain a Bristro, drinking Salon, Formal Dining Rooms, Takeout Bakery and Gourmet Shop, will be announced within the next few weeks.

The location is in the Gateway Center Complex, which straddles the Massachusetts Turnpike, and also includes a Howard Johnson's Hotel and office building. A major refurbishing is taking place and except for the kitchen area, no vestiges of the Red Coach operation will remain.

Since 1983, 10 Red Coach Grills were sold to El Torito/La Fiesta Restaurants, a Division of W. R. Grace. Several other Red Coach Grills have been sold to independent operators, real estate developers, and the Host International Division of Marriott.

Local groups win 7,700 in grants

NEWTON — The Freeport Corporation has announced the recipients of its first annual awards program. A total of $7,700 was awarded to four local organizations for programs to serve youth in Newton, Needham, Wellesley and Weston.

The Freeport Corporation was founded in 1969 by a class at Newton North High School for the purpose of creating an alternative living situation for troubled adolescents. The sale of the original Freeport House in 1983 has provided the capital for the Freeport Annual Awards Program.

For 1984 the directors have awarded $500 to the Newton Arts Center to provide arts scholarships for adolescents not living with their families; $3,450 to Newton Community Service Centers for Project S.A.I.L. which will leverage matching funds from the department of Social Services to provide alternative housing for adolescents; $3,250 to the Newton-Wellesley-Weston Multi Service Center for a feasibility study to explore the concept of a Day Activities and Treatment Program for out-of-school teenagers; and $500 to The Samaritans to investigate the problem of teenage alcoholism and suicide and to publish and distribute the results of this study to schools in Newton, Needham, Wellesley and Weston.

Freeport's primary interest is in promoting alternative housing and related support services for young people. The director's are committed to achieving the highest possible impact with the funds available and are hopeful that other donors who are familiar with Freeport award recipients will feel encouraged on their own to support these programs.

The Freeport Directors are currently accepting applicants for the 1985 Freeport Annual Awards Program. Proposals must be received by January 15 in the office of Grants Management Associates, 100 Franklin St., Boston. Call 357-1500 for information.

The directors of the Freeport Corporation are Rodney Barker, Mary Douglas, Richard Douglas, Estelle Hochberg, H. Peter Karoff, Marion Kaufman, Jean Kole, Nancy Meyerson, and Susan Rothenberg.

F.A. Day geography student

Project brings mail from west coast

NEWTON — The power of the press weighs precisely 82 pounds F. A. Day Junior High School, Newtonville, where eighth-grader Jimmy Olsen recieved two ponderous pouches of mail from San Francisco in response to a letter he sent to the editor of the San Francisco Chronicle about a geography class assignment.

Each student in John Hart's geography class focused on a specfic U.S. city and wrote to the editors of various metropolitan newspapers, asking readers to send information about their cities. Nobody was more surprised at the postal onslaught than Jim, who is still reading scores of letters, cards, newspaper clips, pamplets, books and booklets he has received, in addition to a San Francisco Opera Company T-shirt, a gift Flame hat from the San Francisco Fire Department, plus a personal letter and flag from the Mayor of San Francisco.

Jim is relishing one long letter from a 1952 F.A. day graduate now living in Oakland, Calif., who says he's coming East in a couple of weeks and will telephone to say hello. A former F.A. Day teacher wrote a detailed letter; other transplanted Newtonions sent colorful postcards and posters; senior citizens penned lenthy recollections; students took on writing to Jimmy as class project; and one San Franciscan even sent two 8x10 photos taken by her grandfather at the time of the 1906 earthquake. Some Californians have written Jim more than once, sending him gifts of street maps, transit maps, pictures of themselves and their homes, and chocolate candy.

When you're older you'll know what it's like.

The countless hours alone. The phone that never rings. The children who are so busy with their own lives. You'll also realize how important the work we do is.

United Way agencies help tens of thousands of elderly citizens in Eastern Massachusetts. They provide visiting nurses. Home health care. Protective services. And maybe most importantly – companionship.

Help us help the elderly. After all, if you don't start setting a precedent now, how can you expect others to help you later?

UNITED WAY of Massachusetts Bay

Thanks to you it works for all of us.

Beware of Cabbage Patch panic

Toys are big on the Christmas list

By Patricia McCormack
United Press International

From Michael Jackson dolls to robots and three-wheeled roller skates, Santa's packing fun and lots of surprises for Christmas 1984.

If you please, the robots range from hand-held types to one 2-feet tall and costing $300. The expensive one, Maxx Steele, is made by IDEAL for CBS Toys.

For tiny budgets, there are hand-held Maxx Steeles. The same for the robot tribes. Steele is a leader. One called Wrecker is a demolisher. And so it goes.

Get ready, too, for robot magazines, fan clubs, iron-on patches, posters, buttons. The works.

On the soft side, a new doll family headed by Rainbow Brite, a do-gooder invented by Hallmark and manufactured by Mattel under license, makes peace waves.

Rainbow, who lives at the end of the rainbow, spreads happiness and color throughout the world with the help of sprites. Their good works are gummed up by two characters out to spread gloom and doom.

As with many of the toyland figures expected to score big this holiday, Rainbow Brite will get a boost from a mini-television series.

Evie Lazzarino, product information manager for Hallmark Cards in Kansas City, Mo., said Rainbow Brite is the largest and most successful introduction of any product in Mattel's history. She said the line was sold out to buyers during February's Toy Fair.

At this point, allocation lists are being used to ensure availability of the dolls, Lazzarino said.

Other toyland sizzlers (ordered in big bunches during the annual toy fair in New York last February) also are getting a mighty push from heavy television advertising, most of it on kid programs between now and Christmas.

Some have in common with Rainbow Brite special program tie-ins or a link to a regular television show. Industry sources are talking about record television budgets. So parents better be on the lookout for an onslaught of gimmies for toys peddled on television.

The toyland trends were cited by Douglas Thomson, president of the Toy Manufacturers of America, who also said from the looks of things there are some things Santa won't be packing enough of. Demand is running ahead of supply.

"Cabbage Patch dolls are at the top of the shortage list," Thomson said. "I hear of some shortages in the Care Bear line and spot shortages in robots," he said.

People started holiday shopping early this year and that's one reason for the shortages, he beleves. Also, as in the case of Cabbage Patch dolls, demand never let up after Christmas 1983.

The New York State Consumer Protection Board in mid-October warned parents and children not to become victims of "Cabbage Patch" panic this holiday season.

Richard M. Kessel, executive director of the CPB, said an informal survey of catalogs prominently featuring the kids revealed the dolls are not available and will not be for some time.

Although some catalogs carry notices that the dolls are not currently available, in some cases consumers are not told there are no dolls until they attempt to telephone an order or until they order by mail and receive a refund.

Kessel said he has written to the major mail order firms, asking them to notify custormers the dolls are not available now and probably would not be available during the holiday season.

The Board also said Coleco Industries Inc., manufacturers of the dolls, said they currently have $350 million in unshipped orders nationwide. That translates to a backlog of more than 10 million dolls.

The dolls generally are available at a retail cost of $30 but some outlets have been selling them for as much as $50, Kessel said. Privately, he said, they are being sold for as much as $90. ———

Thomson said the toy businiess, which rang up an estimated $10 billion in sales last year, will be about 20 percent ahead this year from the looks of things. Sixty percent of the buying is for Christmas, he said. If his figures are correct, the 1984 Christmas toy bill should top out at around $6 billion.

"Robots, Star War influences and fantasy toys are coming in very strong," Thomson said.

"This is no surprise. Toys reflect the real world. Everywhere you see robotics moving in. Even NASA with its robotic arm on Challenger has had an influence," Thomson said.

"Then there are the fantasy toys. Masters of the Uniververse is one," he said.

"Transformers are expected to take off," Thomson explained. "These are little toys that may look like a Volkswagen when you take it out of the carton but with a little pushing and switching of parts the item can look like a robot, spaceman or a wristwatch.

"They change shape.

"On personality dolls, I expect the Michael Jackson doll to continue doing well. Last year, it was the Brook Shields doll." ———

Jottings from a stroll through toyland:

—Clip Clop is "the first electronic spring horse." Comes with electronic sound that imitates hoofbeats. Ride fast, he gallops. Ride slow, he trots. Clip-Clop, made by Wonder, whinnies and snorts, too. The soundtrack operates on one nine-volt battery. Clip Clop accepts riders 2 to 6 years old.

—Cabbage Patch Kids Hospital from Babyland General recreates the whole Cabbage Patch Kids story. The playset opens to reveal two levels of play with five different play rooms, foldout entrance way, cabbage patch play garden playground, plus four different collectible figures.

Toyland figures that are expected to be big sellers this Christmas are Rainbow Brite and her friends, above.

—For the legend series of dolls, Effanbee offers Judy Garland as Dorothy in the Wizard of Oz. New is a Louis "Satchmo" Armstrong doll, the first of the firm's new series called "Great Moments in Music." Another new series, "Great Moments in History," begins with a Winston Churchill doll. Baby's first is a new set of dolls — one for birthday, Christmas, Blessing.

—A Muppet Baby Line, new this year. The whole gang. Kermit, Miss Piggy lead the pack.

—Moodie Dolls from Determined Productions are plush numbers that have ability to express a full range of emotions. There also are Moodie T-shirts, sweaters.

—GI Joe's newest is a natural science and tool kit line. The GI Joe Electrnoics Command Center, geared for kids 8 and up, lets kids build an operational GI Joe communications center.

—An Elvis Presley Collectible Series of dolls is on the move with World Doll, a subsidiary of Eugene Doll and Novelty Co. In 1983, this firm scored with a Marilyn Monroe Celebrity Collectible doll.

—Lego Systems newest is a Castle System. Six of the Castle sets can be put together to create a medieval atmosphere.

—To celebrate the 50th anniversary of Dydee Doll, a doll that drinks and wets, the Effanbee Doll Corp. has issued a commermative Dydee edition.

The first, in 1934, was fully jointed, 15 inches tall and made of a composition head and rubber body. The commmerative edition, produced only this year, is 14 ½ inches, fully jointed, and made of vinyl.

Help for do-it-yourselfers

NEW YORK (UPI) — Holiday planners who want to make their own gifts and decorations can get ideas and know-how from a booklet called "Christmas Decorations."

Published by Cornell University's Cooperative Extension, the booklet offers instructions and illustrations for making wreaths, festoons, garlands, table decorations, and other holiday decorations.

Materials, equipment and supplies are explained, as well as sources for gathering ornamental greens, cones, nuts, and seedpods.

Many yard and garden plants can provide the raw materials for attractive arrangements, according to Professor Raymond T. Fox, the booklet's author.

To obtain a copy of "Christmas Decorations", send $1 to the Cornell Distribution Center, 7-CD Research Park, Ithaca, N.Y. 14850. ———

Led by a guide in 19th century garb, guests visit several historic homes, learn how Christmas customs have evolved, board a whaling ship, dance to a fiddler's tunes, and sing Christmas carols.

New records, higher prices for holidays

By Frank Spotnitz

NEW YORK (UPI) — Record companies have begun releasing a slew of new records by top artists such as Paul McCartney, Culture Club and Pat Benatar, hoping the records will pick up enough steam to cash in on heavy Christmas-time shopping.

Holiday shoppers will have to pay more for the gift of music this year, however. Record companies have raised the list price for several new releases by $1 to $9.98.

The first of the big guns hauled out this year is Barbra Streisand's "Emotion," her first studio album in four years. It includes a duet with Kim Carnes and a song she wrote with Indiana rocker John Cougar Mellencamp.

McCartney's "Give My Regards to Broad Street" is a soundtrack to his new film. Although it has no new material, it does feature new versions of several Beatles songs and of his Wings work, including a much improved version of "Silly Love Songs." He also will have a re-release of Wings' "Over America."

Culture Club's third album, "Waking Up the House On Fire," is due at the end of October.

Other likely stocking stuffers include Benatar's "Tropico," Madonna's second LP "Like a Virgin," a new album by Toto called "Isolation," REO Speedwagon's first record in two years, "Wheels Are Turning," and Joan Jett and the Blackhearts' "Glorious Results of a Misspent Youth."

The J. Geils Band's first record without lead singer Peter Wolf, "You're Gettin' Even While I'm Gettin' Odd," Al Jarreau's "High Crime" LP, and new records by Frankie Goes to Hollywood and Duran Duran also will be released.

Prince's "Purple Rain" co-star, Appolonia, has her debut LP out, "Appolonia 6," as does his former flame, Vanity's "Wild Animal."

They may have split up, but the Who will have a double-record live album, featuring some previously unreleased tracks. And yet another compilation of Jimi Hendrix music, "Kiss the Sky," is out.

In the country and western department, look for Willie Nelson's "Songwriter," Hank William Jr.'s "Rare Takes and Radio Cuts," and a greatest hits collection from Teddy Pendergrass.

Several Christmas music albums are set for release.

Dolly Parton and Kenny Rogers have recorded an LP of Christmas songs in Hawaii. Barbara Mandrell is releasing "Christmas at Our House," recorded before her recent traffic collision.

"An Old Fashioned Christmas" by the Carpenters features previously unreleased tracks sung by Karen Carpenter, who died last year.

The classic among Christmas records is still the famous "Phil Spector's Christmas Album," which can be found in the discount rack at many stores.

For jazz afficionados, "God Rest Ye Merry Jazzmen" offers a mix of standards given the jazz treatment by the Heath Brothers, Paquito D'Rivera, Wynton Marsalis, McCoy Tyner, Arthur Blythe and Dexter Gordon.

"Jingle Bell Jazz" from 1962 is still a good buy, featuring "Jingle Bells" by Duke Ellington, "White Christmas" by Lionel Hampton, "Blue Christmas" by Miles Davis.

Should Santa drive a car ?

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Santa Claus may be a jolly guy — but should he drive a sports car?

A self-proclaimed "upscale" California-based car rental company has no problem with it. They're putting Santa behind the wheel.

Showcase Rental Cars of Los Angeles and San Francisco is now offering Christmas gift packages that include a week's use of an Alfa Romeo Spider convertible, GTV-6 sport coupe, Saab Turbo, or Peugeot — delivered to your door by the man in red himself.

These "upscale rental cars," which come gift-wrapped, include cassette systems and tapes, unlimited mileage, full insurance, and a "surprise" travel gift.

The cost is "$575 or less, depending on the model chosen."

Who would want such a gift? "There are lots of people who would enjoy the chance to drive around town in a fun and exciting luxury or high-performance car, even if it's just for a week," says Stan Plog, president of Showcase.

"Already, we have many people who park their own cars in the garage and rent one of ours for the weekend. What we have is fun to drive."

For further information, call 800-4211-6808 outside California, or 800-345-CARS inside California. ———

The discount applies to coach, economy, Super Saver, or Apex fares wherever TWA flies.

A quiet setting in Hawaii

By Gordon N. Sakamoto

LIHUE, Hawaii (UPI) — If the familiar Hawaii resort areas of Waikiki, the Kona Coast and Kaanapali doesn't suit your fancy, consider the island of Kauai for your next vacation.

"The Garden Island," which was hit by a devastating hurricane in 1982 that caused $240 million damage, has made a remarkable recovery and the people have extended their aloha for those who want to get away to a quiet, tropical setting.

Unlike the other resort areas where high-rises abound, Kauai prides itself on the fact that there are no sprawling structures to mar a visitor's view.

Only the Kauai Surf Hotel, which sits on one end of Nawiliwili Harbor, rises above 10 stories.

After the hotel was completed in the early 1960s, Kauai County supervisors decreed that "no building shall be taller than a coconut tree." In keeping to the letter of the law, no structure — not even government offices — protrudes over tree tops.

And to further promote the island's designation as "The Garden Island," the county has embarked on an islandwide beautification project.

Kauai offers the usual tourist amenities of golf, tennis, fishing, beachcombing and the like, but Mayor Tony Kunimura said the island's easy-going lifestyle will impress visitors.

"We're not going to change. Kauai will stay the same — laid back, rural atmosphere. I think people who come to vacation here will see that," he said.

"It's the bountiful spirit of the people of Kauai that has put the island back together after Hurricane Iwa."

United Airlines recently completed its West Coast to all islands direct service by adding Kauai to the daily run from California.

Kauai boasts about 5,000 hotel and condominium units scattered around the island, which heavy concentrations in the Poipu and Hanalei areas.

A variety of guest packages are offered, including family vacation plans, golf and tennis getaways, and romantic Hawaiian hideways for honeymooners and those celebrating anniversaries.

One hotel offers for $285 a summer package of three nights in a deluxe ocean-view room plus a Zodiac rubber rafting expedition and helicopter ride as well as the free use of a car for 72 hours.

The Coco Palms Resort, made famous by the late Elvis Presley in the movie "Blue Hawaii," even provides a wedding chapel for those who want to tie the knot in Hawaii.

"Kauai's economic growth took a new turn with Hurricane Iwa," said James Kurita, director of Kauai County's Office of Economic Development.

"In 1978, Kauai recorded its largest visitor count. It took Kauai 20 years to build its tourist industry and one day to destroy it."

According to Kurita, 844,000 people visited the island in the base year of 1978. But because of anti-development sentiment among community leaders, the visitor count steadily declined over the next four years.

The turn was supposed to be made in 1982.

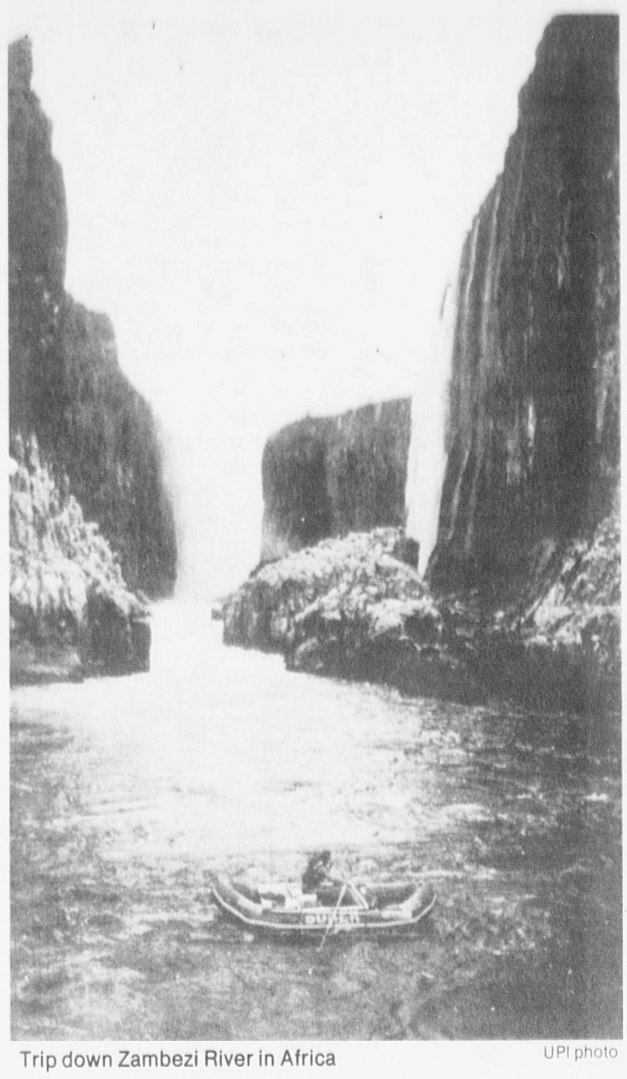

"It was uprward until the hurricane. Through the next year, there was a 25 percent drop in visitors and the county maintained a double-digit decline until the last quarter of last year," said Kurita.

"But with a lot of hard work, a lot of courage and a lot of initiative during the first quarter of 1984, there has been a 39 percent growth in the tourist count. That indicates people are beginning to take notice of Kauai again."

Kunimura makes no excuses about the island's earlier reluctance to seek the tourist trade.

"We resisted direct flights for many years" he said. "But wise men change their minds, fools don't. Now, with direct Mainland flights to Kauai, we've gone from a plantation community to a top resort community. We're now equal to the rest of Hawaii as a destination area."

Geologically, Kauai, which has a population of 41,000, is the oldest of the major islands of Hawaii and was built by one volcano that rises 5,148 feet in the center of the island. Mount Waialeale, as it is called, is the wettest recorded place on Earth with an average annual rainfall of 451 inches.

Winter camping pleasures

It's not as cold as you think

By Robert McNeill
United Press International

There was a time when cold-weather camping was considered a madcap activity suitable only for masochists, polar explorers, sheep hunters or mountaineers obsessed with climbing to the top of the world.

No more.

Blessed with the latest technology in cold-weather clothing and equipment, a camper can, at reasonable expense, enjoy living in the outdoors in January as well as June.

For many true lovers of the outdoors, pleasures of a good winter camping trip can surpass anything to be found in summer.

For one thing, there are no mosquitoes or no-seeums around an iced-over lake. Frozen ground or snow is not muddy. You can leave the ice chest at home; the whole world is your cooler.

A mountain snowscape under a full moon viewed through a cloud of frosty breath is hard to beat. So is the sound of trees cracking in a frozen forest, or the joy of waking warm under sky-lighted nylon and brewing a pot of tea while lazing in a fluffy down-filled bag.

And perhaps best of all, camping areas and wilderness trails are seldom crowded. Indeed, you may find yourself alone for days at a time.

Winter camping takes various forms. You can strike out in a camping trailer, erect your family tent at a public campground, or backpack into the wilderness and sleep in a snow cave.

For true cold weather camping, though, you will be better off to connect it with some physical activity. It is one thing to hole up in a family wall tent in freezing temperatures. It is quite another to pack a light nylon tent on a weekend cross-country skiing, hiking or hunting expedition.

The latest in cold-weather clothing and equipment. UPI photo

The first can be an exercise in staying warm. The second is exercise, period, and the warmth comes naturally. In a sedentary camp, some sort of space heater is almost necessary. Backpackers can be comfortable with the barest necessities.

But warmth and comfort are paramount. And the first consideration is sleep. That means there is one item that must be top quality — the sleeping bag. Get the absolute best you can afford, with either down or synthetic filling, and combine it with a good closed-cell foam pad.

If you must pinch pennies, pinch them elsewhere. Your sleeping bag is the nucleus of your winter camp. It not only means comfort or misery, in some wilderness situations it could save your life. The best is none too good.

Good outdoor stores are filled with fine merchandise that will keep you warm and dry in almost any conceivable temperature. And experienced salespersons can guide you from one layer to another, for layered clothing is the solution to adaptability. Add or subtract layers, depending on the conditions of temperature, wind and physical activity.

Top choices are polypropylene underwear, wool pants and shirts, wool, down or synthetic-fiber jackets, wool hats and socks. As for boots, skiers have little choice. Hikers, unless they are climbers, should consider insulated pacs. Mittens are better than gloves, particularly the ones with silk liners.

If there is one garment critical for cold weather camping it is a wind-resistant parka. Nothing can be as devasting in cold weather as wind. It can lower the wind-chill factor to intolerable levels. A nylon hooded jacket of the "mountain parka" type can prevent a howling gale from reducing you to a helpless state of hypothermia.

The body needs more food in cold weather. Natural hunger pangs will signal the fact. It also needs more fluids, but many people never seem to get thirsty in cold weather. Drink lots of hot stuff anyway — tea, coffee or cocoa.

A little booze in the form of hot buttered rum or one of the other ski lodge specials won't hurt anything, but beware of excessive alcohol. Despite superstitions to the contrary, liquor does nothing to warm a cold body. And it may lead you astray by causing you to mistake inebriation for comfort.

One of the real comforts of a winter camp is a fire. Whether you use it for cooking or just enjoying, a hot fire in a cold camp is a luxury of the first magnitude.

Trouble is, of course, fires are prohibited in many camping areas, even in the winter. So, for cooking, you must consider a stove.

A big two-burner gasoline stove is fine if size and weight are of no consideration. But if you're packing in on your back, you will want one of the small compact stoves fueled by gasoline or butane.

Gasoline is truly an all-temperature fuel. Butane cartridges are neat and easy to handle, but sometimes gets slushy and hard to burn in severe cold unless you warm the cans by taking them to bed with you.

Another thing worth noting: Many people find that their bodies seem to adjust to accommodate the cold. Conditions that seemed cold the first day, don't seem so cold on subsequent days.

So shed a layer and cool off.

Adventure trips are riding high

By John M. Leighty

ANGELS CAMP, Calif. (UPI) — To beat the winter doldrums, river-runner Richard Bangs offers exotic journeys to the remote regions of seven continents, some of the trips so adventure-packed it takes passing a physical exam before he'll accept a traveler's money.

Among the 1,000 trips offered through his agency, Sobek, are December through February white-water rafting on Chile's Bio-Bio (14 days, $1,870), October through March treks up Mount Everest (20 days, $1,142) and overland hikes through Botswana from November to April (15 days, $1,116). Air fares are extra.

Sobek — named after the Egyptian crocodile god — is an adventure traveler's clearing house headquartered in an old chicken ranch in Angels Camp, a gold rush mountain town made famous by Mark Twain in his classic short story "The Jumping Frog of Calavaras County."

A staff of 22 outdoor enthusiasts use a computer system to match clients to the kind of trips they desire — from easy bird-watching hikes through the Black Forest to roaring down the most treacherous rapids in the world. Descriptions and photos of the journeys are made available in Sobek's "The Adventure Book."

"It's sort of a consumer's guide for travelers," explains Bangs, 33, president of Sobek and a mild-mannered, 6-foot-1, 180-pound "river rat" who has turned his passion for exploration into a multimillion-dollar business.

He said 2,200 people are card-carrying members of Sobek's International Explorer's Society, which offers discounts on trips and equipment for a $30 fee. Anyone, however, can sign up for an adventurous vacation.

Bangs and his outdoor partner, John Yost, go out on trips as often as they can and each year invite proven society members to go along on "commercial exploratories" through unknown regions, usually by boat. He's headed for Sumatra next month to explore the wild Alas River in the Orangatanga Reserve with National Geographic.

"For these trips we invite a few members who are proven, who we know fairly well and who have demonstrated they can handle the unexpected," said Bangs.

Although many trips described in "The Adventure Book" are by outfitters other than Sobek, Bangs said only those are included who have a proven reputation. The book presently lists journeys offered by 80 established tour operators, along with some 40 trips given by Sobek's own guides.

The variety of adventures offered are rated in difficulty on a scale ranging from Class 1 to Class 5 trips. Class 1, for example, are easy trips emphasizing scenic or cultural values of a region and where groups use hotel accommodations. Travel is by vehicle, although some short hikes or gentle river floats are usually included.

By contrast, Class 4 and Class 5 trips are considered difficult and often strenuous. They require certain amounts of technical skill and experience, along with certificates of health.

All but the easiest category involves some camping, hiking or river-riding. Some of the trips can be taken for college credits, and a recent addition is a series of medical conferences at wilderness locations that qualifies as re-education requirements for doctors.

For the average traveler, however, the water trips are the most intriguing.

"River rafting is far and away the most popular, particularly in our bookings," said Bangs. "This is because it's so accessible.

"Anybody can do river rafting. It basically is sitting in the raft and holding on. Everything else — hiking, climbing, skiing — requires some other more physical ability."

Bangs said there's never been any major injuries or deaths on Sobek-arranged trips, although one boat was attacked and damaged by a hippo on Ethiopia's Omo River, which he and Yost were the first Americans to explore in 1973 and which launched them into the adventure business. During the 500-mile river run, he said, they ran spectacular rapids, counted 260 crocodiles and ate barbecued hippo with Bodi tribesmen.

"The Omo is our longest running trip and probably the most exotic. We've done it continually now for 12 years," said Bangs. "It's in the southwestern part of Ethiopia and the government has never seemed to mind when we come in and float down this corridor far away from the country's political problems."

Northeastern ski resorts diversified

By B.L. Goldberg

MONTPELIER, Vt. (UPI) — A decade ago the envied skier who carved a trail through virgin New England snow was the lucky driver whose car made it from a remote country inn to the ski resort on a snowy morning.

Now the first marks on the mountain are made by a vacationer who rolls from bed into his ski boots and stumbles out a hotel room door to the chairlift 30 yards away — before the rest of the bunch. New England's ski areas are scrambling to pack their mountain bases with the hotels, restaurants and sports centers that will earn them the label "destination resort." In Vermont alone, workers at five ski areas spent the summer putting final touches on health clubs, retail shops, and lounges where skiers wanting more than only a challenge on the slopes can spend their time.

"You can park your car and not need it again for five days," said Rick Owen, a spokesman for Loon Mountain in Lincoln, N.H. Destination resort plans popped up on drawing boards at New England ski areas in the last decade in an effort to stem the flow of day customers boarding planes for longer vacations at ski villages in the Rockies. The idea came as a series of snowless winters forced ski areas to seek ways of keeping customers happy without skis.

Ski areas produced their own answers by building elaborate "sports complexes," offering swimming, tennis, saunas, exercise rooms, tanning centers, racquetball and conference centers. They constructed day care centers, restaurants, lounges and shopping centers.

"It's an insurance policy for a great vacation whether or not we get snow," said Sam Douglas, spokesman for the Sugarbush ski resort in Warren.

Regardless of the brown winters and the migration to the Rockies, New England ski areas must change because Eastern skiers are changing.

"We're much more sophisticated," said Kathleen O'Dell-Thompson, a spokeswoman for the Vermont Ski Areas Association. "Our lives are so intense that we are using skiing not just as a sport but as a family vacation."

She added, "In general, the resorts are trying to appeal to families and not just the 18-to-20-year-old hot-shot."

In an effort to anchor Eastern skiers to New England slopes this winter, the ski areas association fired a direct shot at people who might consider a Western ski trip. Its 1985 advertising package includes a chart showing the cost of a seven-night Vermont vacation at $530 compared to one in the Rockies at $1,470.

The advertisement says the cost comparison is based on a New York departure point and prices are per person, double occupancy, for seven nights and six days. Lift tickets, equipment rental, five two-hour lessons, air fare and car rental are also included. However, the advertisement says, the Vermont vacation assumes a skier arrives in his own automobile.

Collossal changes can be involved in the metamorphosis from ski area to destination resort. Stratton Mountain in Bondville is in the first stage of a $60 million transition that will create a 22-acre village at the mountain base over the next three years.

"It will take eight minutes to walk from one end of the village to the other," said Stratton spokesman Tom Myers.

Sitting right now at Stratton's base are 600 condominiums, 400 chalets, a 125-room inn with a restaurant and bar, a chapel and a medical center. A sports complex and a cross-country ski center are a shuttlebus ride away.

"Stratton operates every aspect of the resort," Myers said.

Other Vermont areas like Sugarbush, Mount Mansfield in Stowe, Smugglers Notch in Jeffersonville and Bolton Valley in Bolton have also built sport complexes.

Maine's Sugarloaf Mountain in Bigelow offers its skiers the chance to hang up their car keys and walk from their condominium or hotel rooms to eight restaurants or four lounges.

They can schuss off the chairlift to a nearby health spa, take the reins on a horse-drawn sleigh ride or strap on skates and take to the ice.

"We are a true alpine village," Sugarloaf spokeswoman Beverly Hunt said.

That is a common refrain among nearly all of the spokesmen from the larger New England ski areas. But even the smaller areas are changing their appeal.

Winter travel in Europe

A winter traveler in Europe who hopes to avoid the summer crush often winds up battling crowds anyway. But those willing to stray from the usual Alps ski resorts or Greek island beaches can still find plenty of sun, snow and local color.

Yugoslavia, for example, offers a stay at the alpine villa of late President Tito with skating out the front door on beautiful Lake Bled. On one of Spain's Canary Islands, a visitor can frolic on deserted beaches where the surf pounds against Sahara-like dunes.

A drive around England's picturesque West Country provides fox hunts and prehistoric monuments. And for those who prefer touring on skis, a cross-country trip along Sweden's Kungsleden, or King's Route, will bring the hardy traveler near the Arctic Circle.

Tito's villa, which before World War II was a residence for the Yugoslav royal family, was opened by the government to visitors for the first time this past summer.

Secluded in a 32-acre park on the banks of the lake, the villa has 90 rooms. A double runs from $50 to $70 while a splurge on a roomy suite is about $110.

Thieves strike on cars on Amherst Rd.

NEWTON — Four cars parked on Amherst Road were either stolen or buglarized sometime last Sunday night or early Monday morning, police said.

A 1984 Jeep parked in front of another home was burglarized and stolen from the vehicle were a radar detector, a Pentax 35mm camera, a child's electronic game and a Sony Walkman radio, police said.

Two other cars — a 1983 Datsun Nissan and a 1975 Volkswagon Dasher — were also burglarized while they sat parked in front of an Amherst Road home, police said.

Stolen from both cars was a combined total of $19 in cash and change left inside the gloveboxes, police said.

Pleads innocent to lewdness

NEWTON — A Waltham auto salesman pleaded innocent last Tuesday in Newton District Court to open and gross lewdness.

Thomas F. Farrell, Jr., 32, of 18 Reyem St., Waltham, was arrested earlier the same day on a Newton warrant alleging open and gross lewdness on Oct. 18 in the presence of three teenage girls.

He was ordered held on $5,000 surety, or $500 cash bail. Records show $500 was posted to secure his release pending further court proceedings today.

Farrell is an auto salesman for Mara Chrysler-Plymouth on High Street.

Bomb threats clear local banks

NEWTON — A Friday bomb threat at two local Baybank offices forced employees and customers into the streets while police searched for explosives, records show.

Police did not find any evidence of a bomb at either the Newton Centre or Newton Highlands branch, where a male caller claimed he had placed explosives as a protest to the banks' alleged support of U.S. involvement in Vietnam and El Salvador.

The phone call was received by a customer service representative at the Beacon Street branch at about 4:25 p.m., police said. The bombs were purportedly set to explode in 55 minutes, records show.

Flashing incident at Laundromat

NEWTONVILLE — A woman at the Newtonville Laundromat was allegedly flashed by a man who exposed himself while he stood outside the rear of the building, police said.

The incident occurred at about 10 p.m. while the victim was folding laundry on a bench in the rear of the store, police said. When she heard someone knocking on the rear glass door, she turned and saw a man standing there and exposing himself, police said.

The man was described as white, about 35 years old, five-feet, 10-inches tall, with dark brown hair, a crew cut and an unshaven face. He was wearing blue jeans at the time, police said.

Complaints sought against youth

NEWTON — Court complaints will be sought against a 14-year-old local youth who allegedly shot out the window of a passing bus with a pellet gun Sunday, police said.

The youth, a Commonwealth Avenue resident, allegedly shot out the driver's side window of a 34-seat bus travelling east on Commonwealth Avenue near Hammond Street shortly before 6:30 p.m. from the porch roof of his home, police said.

A passenger on the bus was reportedly struck by flying glass, but was not seriously injured, police said.

Police confiscated a Crossman pellet gun from the suspect shortly after the incident occurred, records show.

Woman injured in 2-car crash

NEWTON — A Newton woman involved in an early-morning car accident Monday was reported in fair condition at Newton-Wellesley Hospital.

Police said Sara Caplan, 67, of 2300 Commonwealth Ave., was a passenger inside a 1974 Ford that was struck by another auto at about 7:40 a.m. as it crossed the intersection of Woodland and Grove Streets.

Her husband, Samuel, 73, who was driving the car, was not injured, records show.

The driver of the other car, Jeffrey Cooke, 29, of Natick, was travelling north on Grove Street when the accident occurred, records show. No citations were issued by police at the time.

Man committed to psychiatric watch

NEWTON — A Newton man who allegedly attacked his mother and threatened to kill her was committed to 20 days of psychiatric observation prior to an arraignment on assault charges in Newton District Court.

Arthur L. Mann, 31, of 11 Faxon St., is scheduled to be arraigned Nov. 13 on charges alleging assault and battery, assault with a dangerous weapon (china vase) and malicious destruction of personal property.

His bruised and battered mother was treated and released at Newton-Wellesley Hospital after she was attacked by her son inside her Hammond Pond Parkway apartment.

Mann was arrested at his home at about 7 p.m. last Monday, almost an hour after the alleged attack occurred, police said.

According to police, the woman called police at about 6:15 p.m. and said her son just tried to kill her. When police arrived at her home, they found the woman bruised and bleeding from facial swelling and her apartment almost completely ransacked, police said.

Chief Quinn warns of lunchtime thief

NEWTON — A recent series of thefts inside nursing homes and church rectories were made by a woman who arrives at lunchtime and searches through office desks, taking whatever cash is available, police said.

Police Chief William Quinn warns employees at churches, schools and nursing homes to be on the lookout for a white female, about 20 years old, less than five-feet tall, weighing about 100 pounds, with black, curly hair parted in the middle.

The woman talks with a slight speech impediment, displays a heart tattoo on the inside of her left calf, occasionally wears oversized eyeglasses and sometimes dresses in short skirts, police said.

Night parking violators face fine

NEWTON — Chief William F. Quinn notes that New Englanders know snow will soon be falling. He states, "In an endeavor to facilitate snow removel when it does become necessary Newton Police Officers are currently putting courtesy tags on all night parkers."

Violators will be tagged with a subsequent fine of $5. According to the chief, courtesy tagging will continue through October with citations being issued as of the first of November.

In conjuction with the enforcement of all-night parking, officers have also been instructed to pay particular attention to cars that block sidewalks as a result of overhanging driveways or being parked on the berm. Not only do blocked sidewalks represent a safety hazard to our school children and other pedestrians but it makes it extremely difficult for sidewalk plows to clear an unobstructed path. Any vehicle in violation will be subject to a $15 ticket.

During moderate weather, enforcement of the all-night parking ordinance is relaxed unless neighbors, complain, however, with the coming of winter it is imperative that all vehicles be removed from the streets to allow the snow plows to be as effective as possible. The city ordinance states that no one may park for more than one hour between the hours of 2 a.m. and 6 a.m.

Conviction for drug charge

Middlesex News Service
By Gary Dorion

CAMBRIDGE — A 24-year-old Mattapan man has been given a six to 10 year concurrent prison term after admitting to possession of heroin with intent to distribute it in Newton and to breaking into homes in Framingham.

Sentenced to a term that will run concurrently with a nine to 15 year sentence he now is serving at Walpole Prison was Leroy A. Wallace, Jr.

Wallace recently changed his plea to guilty on charges of possession of heroin with intent to distribute the drug in Newton last March 5, 1984 and possession of cocaine March 5, 1984. He also pleaded guilty to breaking and entering into two Framingham homes on April 1, 1983 and April 22, 1983 during which he stole money and jewelry.

Asst. DA Laurence Pierce, telling the court break-ins are a "way of life" for Wallace, said Wallace already was serving time in Walpole Prison in connection with guilty pleas to eight other breaks in Suffolk County. Pierce recommended that the judge sentence the defendant to a six to 10 year Walpole Prison sentence that would be served after, not concurrent with, his present sentence.

Calling Wallace a "professional burglar" Judge Steele initially refused the defense lawyer's recommendation of a six to 10 year concurrent term, saying that three to five years of additional prison time is the "best I can do."

However, the judge finally yielded to the defense's request and imposed a concurrent term after Wallace indicated he might retract his offer to plead guilty.

According to Pierce, Newton Police, armed with search warrants at 8:20 p.m. last March, arrested Wallace at a Newton motel and confiscated two packets of heroin and some cocaine from his person.

Wallace allegedly told police "yeh, I just give it to my old lady and my friends."

DA probes husband's role in wife's injuries

By Eric Fehrnstrom
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The Middlesex County District Attorney's office is investigating the circumstances of a September accident that left a 22-year-old Newton woman in a coma, a spokeswoman said.

That investigation, the spokeswoman said, centers on the role the woman's husband played in allegedly contributing to his wife's injuries.

According to Asst. DA Marion Ryan, she is heading up a state police investigation into the cause of head injuries suffered by Helena Villalobos, of 338 Langley Road, who has been in a coma at Newton-Wellesley Hospital for over a month.

Newton police said she allegedly jumped from a fast-moving Dodge van following an argument with her husband, who was driving the vehicle at the time of the early-morning Sept. 4 accident on Beacon Street near Boston College.

"We are still investigating the incident," Ryan said. "I am not, at this point, seeking any indictments. We are still looking into the situation."

At the time, John Donahue, 25, told police he was returning with his wife from a Boston nightclub and travelling west on Beacon Street at about 30 m.p.h. when the accident occurred.

The couple was apparently engaged in an argument that began inside the club and continued during the ride home, police said. The woman then allegedly opened the passenger door and jumped from the vehicle.

The Newton police traffic division, led by Capt. John Bartinelli, has been conducting an extensive investigation into the accident, including collecting materials worn by the victim at the time of the incident, Bartinelli said.

Several factors have been considered during the investigation, Bartinelli said, including blood found on the victim, materials found inside the van and the nature of the actual injuries.

NEWTONVILLE — Jim Patriquin is hunched over a slanted metal table in the "Newtonite" office, his brown eyes zipping up, down and over long columns of print.

While his gaze alternates between a clock on the wall and the materials below him, his hand cautiously guides an edit-ready razor through blocks of copy he will reorganize into a newspaper story.

Chuck Robertson strolls up beside Patriquin's stool and the two managing editors join efforts in the scanning process. Meanwhile, advisor Helen Smith is scuttling around checking photographs and rechecking already reviewed copy which Editor-in-Chief, Caleb Baker will give the once-over yet another time later.

"Do we have the right names for those kids in the photos?" Smith asks anxiously. "I'm not sure you should have that as a lead," she adds, spinning around on her heels to address another page editor. "Make sure you have the next graph say what's going on in the story."

It is 3:30 on a Wednesday afternoon. All day long, student staff writers, advertising managers and page editors have drifted in and out of the hectic newspaper production room where they spend almost every ounce of their free time pasting-up, editing, photographing or reviewing copy for Newton North's award-winning newspaper, "The Newtonite."

By week's end, when the 16-page publication is printed, coordinated and distributed to more than 3,000 student and community readers, each staffer will have spent about 30 hours making it happen. They go through the process 16 times a year.

"We take great pains to get the facts straight and try very, very hard to be accurate," Smith says. "Our credibility is a priceless asset."

Smith has literally written the book on student newspapers. In conjunction with administrative assistant for Support Services, Kenneth Temkin, the educator recently published a guide on managing the business side of a student newspaper. The energetic, salt and pepper-haired advisor also teaches a course on newspaper advising to classes at the Columbia School of Journalism.

In order to reinforce the editing skills and sharp news eye Smith instills in her journalism students, she covers all 16 pages of every printed edition with a mass of black-inked scribbles, reminding the young journalists what they should have done and praising them for what they remembered to do. "I try to be their best advocate and critic," she says, smiling.

Her efforts have paid off.

Each year, the 62-year-old Newtonite garners award after award as one of the leading scholastic publications in the country. Last year, in addition to receiving first place for class I school newspapers, "The Newtonite" also earned a medalist rating from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association and the All New England Award in School Editing and Publishing from the New England Press Association. "Mirettes," a French supplement published once a year, recently earned 995 out of 1,000 possible rating points.

Managing Editor Jim Patriquin attends to pasteup.

But students don't become "Newtonites" just for the prizes, Smith says. "I don't think anyone's an award junkie," she asserts in her characteristically no-nonsense, business manner. "We all do it for the experience. It means a great deal to the students to do real journalism."

Although the "backbone" of student newspapers has traditionally been features, Smith says, "The Newtonite" is turning more and more to hard news issues, while trying to write things that interest students and "that only students can write."

Managing editor Patriquin, whom Smith extols as a "skilled and brave" writer, recently sunk his investigative teeth into the explosive issue of unsettled teacher contracts. The project had him up until 2 a.m. the night before publication.

"Sometimes the volume of work can be detrimental to your enthusiasm," Patriquin admits. "But the challenge makes it all worthwhile."

Not only does the experience sharpen the students' writing skills and teach them how to handle the pressure of real-life deadlines, it also gives them the invaluable research and production skills they will need for college and the jobs that follow, Smith says.

How do students successfully shoulder regularly scheduled homework and the added pressure of producing a great school newspaper?

Staff relations can be the key, according to Editor-in-Chief Baker. "When the staff doesn't get along, it hurts the paper," he says. "Like when someone has had a bad day in school or something.

"But you have to get down to work," he adds quickly. "Great things will happen when you get down to work."

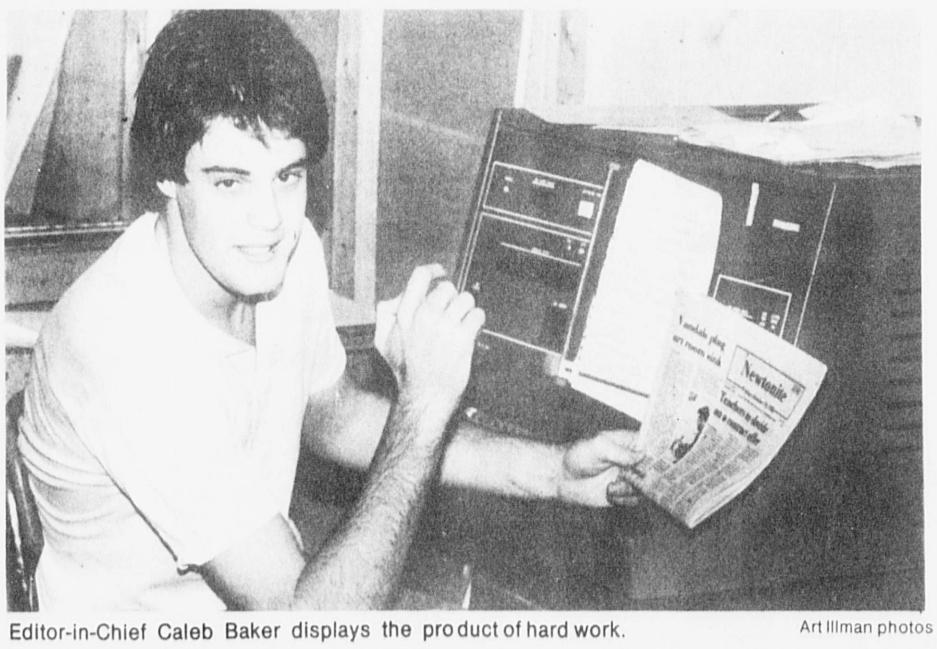

Scattered about the room of old papers, pinned up memos and strips of old film are daily reminders that it is essential for students to remain human under pressure. "Be Nice," a daily chalkboard message advises.

A sense of humor is essential as well, apparently, as the title of the "Official Newtonite Boring Memo" indicates. A piece of cardboard ripped from a box of Cheerio's, the Newtonite's "official cereal" also reminds the perpetually busy students that even journalists have to eat, sleep and relax once in a while.

Which is not to say the newspeople don't take their work seriously when they are here. Students who become Newtonites want to be Newtonites, Smith says, because whether they do it for the news, features, production or photography, "it is hard, hard work."

"'The Newtonite' is the most worthwhile activity you could join," says Baker earnestly. "We work harder than anyone in the school.

"And it shows."

Library top priority for funds

By Richard Nangle
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The aldermanic Human Services Committee voted to approve a resolution which would authorize the mayor not to appropriate funds derived from selling or leasing city property for any purpose until plans for building a new library are drawn up.

The resolution, the work of aldermen Louis Irwin, Cynthia Creem and Verne Vance is an attempt to emphasize the city's priority for building a new library.

The committee discussed alternative wording before voting the proposal with only the abstention of Alderman Matthew Jefferson.

It reads in part: "Be it resolved that the Board of Aldermen urges the Mayor not to seek appropriation of monies derived from the sale or lease of surplus city property for any purpose other than the design or construction of a new main library facility, until such time as an alternative plan for financing said facility comes before the Board of Aldermen."

Jefferson argued that the door should be left open for budgeted taxpayer funds to go toward the library.

But Chairman Rodney Barker added that the resolution does not preclude the city from using tax money in addition to surplus city property.

The committeemen also pondered what seems to be an inequity in a local college loan fund after making an appointment to the fund's Board of Trustees.

On the recommendation of Mayor Theodore D. Mann, the committee voted unanimously to appoint Marie Hermann, of 95 Dudley Road, Newton Centre for life tenure to the John C. Chaffin Educational Fund.

Hermann replaces Jeannette C. West, who has been named Honorary Trustee Emerita.

The fund grants loans of up to $500 a semester for a maximum of five semesters to local students who otherwise could not afford higher education.

The committee also approved the reappointments of Arthur Lyman of 59 Stuart Road, Newton Center, and Marianne Anderson of 565 Boylston St., Newton Center, to the Human Rights Commission until April 1, 1987.
